Jap 'Peace Aid's' Daughter Honeymoon's With Yank

TOKYO, Japan, July 30.—The second act of "Love Laughs at Pearl Harbor" was being enacted today in a mountain resort 100 miles north of Tokyo.

Beautiful, Chicago-born Jaye Korusu, 33-year-old daughter of "peace envoy" Saburo Korusu, was honeymooning at Karuzawa with 1st Lt. William J. Maddox Jr., 28-year-old son of a Washington, D. C. newspaperman.

The couple were married last week, almost a year after Jaye's sister, Pia Korusu, became Mrs. Frank White, wife of a former American army lieutenant.

In 1941 the father of the two sisters was talking peace in Washington when Jap bombs were falling on Pearl Harbor.

Cleared Up Charges

Asked if he and his bride had considered the social consequences of their marriage, Lt. Maddox said today:

"We considered it a long time. However, Jaye's father was cleared of being a war criminal because the evidence showed he was unaware of the attack on Pearl Harbor. I'm satisfied in my own mind that he didn't know. He was purged, of course, but that was because he had been ambassador to Germany."

Lt. Maddox said he met Jaye in February, 1947, while stationed at Karuzawa—a pre-war summer resort for the international set—with a German repatriation unit.

"We did lots of horseback riding because both of us liked it," Lt. Maddox said. "Then we became engaged a year ago, when Pia and Frank were married."

Born in Chicago

Jaye was born in Chicago while her father was consul there. Her mother is the former Alice Jay Little of New York City.

Lt. Maddox was attending Michigan State University, at East Lansing, when war came. He entered the Army in 1942 and came to Japan two years ago. He never saw combat.

The bride, five years older than her husband, had been married to a Jap naval officer. This union was annulled after the Jap surrender by the simple expedient of scratching the names of the two parties from the marriage register.
