

Ask Mrs. Manners—

'Old Fiance Returns, But I'm Married Now'

I WAS ENGAGED to one of the finest boys in the world when they took him into the Army. For the first eight months he was gone I couldn't have been a better girl. The girl friends said it would do me good to go out, stag, of course, I did.

I went with a boy for 10 months and marriage was necessary. He got me a home, furniture and everything. I helped out some for I worked until I lost my baby at three months. After that I went back to work.

The fellow I was going to marry came home. I realized a long time before that I was still in love with him. I didn't let on to him or anyone else. Our working at the same place finally compelled us to be alone. I was uneasy and he just up and says "You know, I still love you."

He insisted we talk about what happened. I told him I made a mistake and I did love him. I didn't leave my husband who I am now living with. He loves me and would do anything to make me happy. What should I do? I made a mistake, but I don't believe I'm a bad girl.

The first serious boy friend holds an attraction that few succeeding men can match. That doesn't mean that attraction would be lasting. Love was never for him as you when you meet this first boy. Added to that he went to war—he was a hero and you were home suffering. He's exciting again—and he's daring—but would he do anything for you like your husband? You don't know that he would keep loving you and you don't know that you two would get married. You DO know that your husband loves you and that you get along.

Change jobs—there's no one to suffer. You once forgot the old boy friend enough to become attracted to the man you married. You could—and should—again. Your husband will be more exciting if you give him more attention.

'How Long Must a Son Be Supported?'

DOES A DIVORCED man have to pay support for a son until he is 18 or 21 or until the boy has a job? I know state laws vary, but I want to know about this law in Indiana. We know you help many people and your answers have helped me.

HAPPILY MARRIED, CITY.

He Wants Girl, 16, to Stop Dating Others
I'm 17 and my girl friend is 16. How could I get her to stop going with other boys? I love her more than anything in the world. I take her to the movies and then walk her home. I asked her to go to the movies next Saturday and she had a date. She always goes with other boys, but I can't keep from loving her.

GREENWOOD READER.

You'll know how to win her after you've observed what girls like. You can't become a man of experience dating one girl. She is going to be a lot wiser than you are because she's meeting lots of people. You'd better meet some, too.

'Must We Give Up the Children?'

WHEN I WAS 15 I was very much in love with a certain boy. That very year that boy and my best girl friend ran away together and got married. Three years later they came back and asked me to take care of their two children because they had to go on a vacation. At first I didn't want to, but the children were so sweet I decided to do it.

I took care of the children for several years and grew to love them. Twelve years later the parents came back and wanted the children whom my husband and I had grown to love, and they loved us. Do you think we should give them back their children even though we have done all of the raising?

WORRIED INDIANAPOLIS READER.

Say, that was a long vacation! There isn't much you can do. Apparently you didn't adopt the children and they weren't placed in your custody by a legal agency. Aren't you glad that you didn't marry a man who could leave his children so long?

'Wants to Take Care of Children?'

HOW COULD I get to take care of children on Saturday nights?
