Doctor Bares
 Clubfoot
 Treatments

Cohesive Bandages
 Used on Infants

By Science Service
 CHICAGO, Sept. 10—Clubfooted infants are being treated with a high degree of success by a new technique with cohesive bandage which is akin to the Chinese custom of binding the feet of their baby girls.

The advantage of this treatment is that it can be begun the day after birth while the newborn infant is still in the hospital under the care of the physician. Dr. Emil D. W. Hauser pointed out here.

Moreover, the cohesive bandage does not adhere to or irritate the skin. It is wound firmly around the foot beginning just below the knee with emphasis placed on overcorrecting the deformity.

 The entire foot and leg are covered with only the very tips of the toes left visible.

Over this is placed a stirrup type of bandaging to force the foot into a knock-kneed position. Then an encircling bandage, wound all the way down to the ankle, holds this in place.

The foot needs further support against the constantly contracting muscles so adhesive tape is superimposed in like fashion to prevent the foot from returning to its abnormal position.

Early Treatment Needed
 Dr. Hauser emphasized that this treatment must be begun immediately after birth. The earlier treatment of clubfoot is begun, the better the correction, for the younger the child the more rapid is the growth and the softer and more easily changed are structures of the foot, he said.

With former methods, such as the use of plaster casts and splints, treatment could not be begun until a baby was from one to three months old.

If treatment begins while the baby is still in the hospital, the bandage is reinforced daily, with more correction in each treatment.

At the end of a week a new encasement must be applied because the other usually becomes ill-fitting. The procedure is then repeated at each visit to the doctor.

Results Successful
 This corrective bandage must be kept on until the child begins to walk, otherwise the deformity may recur, he declared.

Results in 70 patients treated over a period of six years with this technique were highly successful, Dr. Hauser reported to the Journal of the American Medical Association.

Although in some cases a tight tendon in the foot did not allow a full correction with the bandage alone, it was possible to lengthen it with surgery. In only a few of these cases did a child fail to develop a normal foot.
