It Happened Last Night

By Earl Wilson

NEW YORK, Oct. 2.—Gypsy Rose Lee has come to the end of her G-string.

She wants to give up the strip. As though the world were not having enough sadness, Gypsy just broke this news. Gypsy, who took strip-teasing out of the gutter and elevated it to a fine art, has signed a contract to start peeling at La Martinique cafe late next month, but she's been trying to withdraw.

"Are you tired of stripping?" I asked her.

"I must say I bored myself to death doing it at the Air Force show at Madison Square Garden," she said.

Rolling Above Knees GYPSY told me this sitting in her husband's, artist Julio de Diego's, room at her 28-room house.

She was wearing levis rolled above her knees, showing her bare legs, which are quite attractive when bare, and sort of a halter with a plunging neckline.

"You know in my act when I start rolling my stockings down," she said.

Silly question. Of course I do.

Brings a Laugh AT THIS point she always mentions that a stripteaseer never thinks about stripping but of art and literature, and the other night she mentioned the best-seller, "The Naked and the Dead."

"The first time I used that," Gypsy reflected, "the book mentioned was 'The Forty Days of Musa Dagh.'"

"I got to thinking, why, all the authors of the books I mentioned have written two or three books since and I'm still doing the same lyrics. Show business has changed. I wonder if it'll ever come back to me again?"

Plenty of Dough GYPSY'S WISH to retire has grown as she's figured out that if she goes on a tour all she can come back with, net, is a paltry $20,000.

"I don't need $20,000 for my happiness. No matter how much I had we'd still eat in the kitchen and be happy," she said.

"As for saving for a rainy day, I've got enough for a cloudburst now. I've been buying annuities since I was a baby."

"They want me to come down and tell them what color to paint the ladies' room at La Martinique. And I want to get the right perfume in the club."

"Have you," she asked, "smelled Bergdorf's Goodman lately?"

In a Panic "IT HAS a very comfortable smell and if I work there I want to get it for our little padded."

Ask Mrs. Manners—

'Wed 24 Years, Hubby Bought Me One Outfit'

I'VE FALLEN IN LOVE with my boss who has given me more happiness in nine months than I've had in my whole 44 years of life. He is my ideal—kind and loving.

My husband threatened to kill himself or my boss if I didn't quit my job, and said he'd return to dope. I took care of him during the dope cure, and loved him.

In our 24 years of marriage he bought me but one outfit. I worked 20 years and also kept house. I stopped saving with him, for he was unfair, so we argued. He was good to me but cold, and he never let me have children. He doesn't like people or going places.

I traded strict parents for a husband just as strict. I was born of parents wanting no children and never asserting them. I started working when 12 and left home to work at 18. I married at 19, this man having had a childhood like mine.

I'd like information on drugs he uses for he won't go to the doctor, and he won't wear a hearing aid. I feel like I'm dealing with an insane man.

I'd want to be sure whether my husband was actually ill before I walked out on him for good. Talk to his doctor—he is getting prescriptions some place. You also could get information on drugs by writing to the Indiana State Board of Health, 1008 W. Michigan St.

It seems a shame to leave a husband you loved 24 years. You might find yourself worrying about him because you loved him as well as pitied him through difficult times. Your love must have been pretty big. Kindness from your boss may be swaying you and making you think you love him.

PEG CITY. In Love With a Married Man I'M DEEPLY IN LOVE with a married man who tells me just about everything except "I love you." We've gone many places together, and he makes love to me awhile. Then he stops and won't kiss me for weeks.

He seems to love his wife at times. Do you think he could love me too, even more than her? I'm confused, because I love him more than I ever wanted to. I can't forget him though I've tried and am still trying.

This man is trying to decide something too—maybe how to let you down easily since he has discovered that it isn't so much fun after all to step out on his wife—with a girl so easy he can have her without any trouble. I don't think he loves you both—and neither does he.

Seeks Advice on Missing Daughter SHOULD I ASK my daughter to come home and help us out with her two children she left with us five years ago? How could I find her?

She is 35 and is my daughter by another marriage. She has a good stepfather, and I feel he has done his share. I took her in when she had no place to go and the children were 3 and 4. She ran away and we raised them as our own. She hasn't come home very often. She doesn't care for her children and they can't learn to love her for she never gave them a penny—or even kissed them.

My husband and I are getting old, and he is in real poor health. We want the children to have their schooling, and they aren't big enough to work. Their mother is single now. She has been married twice.

WORRIED MOTHER. Let Mrs. Manners and readers of the column share your problems and answer your questions. Write in care of The Times, 214 W. Maryland St.

TONIGHT AND TOMORROW—Weather forecasters predict a mass of cold Canadian air will send temperatures dropping tonight. The mercury will range from the 30's in the Great Lakes to 40's in the Ohio Valley and New England states. Milder 50's and 60's can be expected tonight in the Central, Southern and Atlantic Coast states. Moist air sweeping inland will be the cause of rain in the Southeast, it is predicted.
