British Flier Sees 'Blasts' On Berlin Run

U. S. Air Officials
Declared Concerned

BERLIN, Oct. 7 (UP)—Russia informed the Western power that sweeping air war maneuvers would be held near the Berlin airlift corridors today.

A short time later a British pilot reported he saw Soviet planes dropping live bombs. One pilot said he saw "bursts" of live bombs exploding beneath Russian bombers making practice runs 10 miles north of Frohnau, on the northern boundary of the French sector of Berlin.

Noticed No Bursts
Two other British pilots also reported they saw Russian bombers practicing but had not seen any bomb bursts.

Live bombing practice was not included on the long list of maneuvers the Soviets threatened to carry out.

The announcement merely said the maneuvers would consist of anti-aircraft fire, parachute jumps, firing at sleeve targets, and formation and individual fights of bombers and fighters.

Several similar though less extensive threats have been made by the Russians in the past but none have materialized.

But western air officers were understood to regard the Russian maneuvers as the most serious threat to the lift yet made by the Russians.

Yanks Concerned
American sources were concerned most seriously by the announcement of the air to air firing.

The announcement gave no information on the number of planes to be engaged, the altitude at which the firing would be done, or the exact time of the firing.

No detailed information was given on formations or individual fights along and across the corridors.

Red Bombers Busy
The Soviets said merely that several numbers of planes would operate at altitudes of 3000 to 15,000 feet.

Meanwhile, 50 to 80 four-engine Russian bombers, apparently the Soviet copy of the U. S. B-29, were reported to have carried out simulated bombing attacks on Erfurt, 125 miles northeast of Frankfurt on the air corridor to Berlin.

It was described as the first large scale appearance in Germany of the Soviet model of the American Superfort.

Phone Operator Saves Monoxide Gas Victims

WASHINGTON, Oct. 7 (UP)—

The quick-thinking of a pretty, 23-year-old telephone operator was credited today with saving the lives of a government official and his wife.

The heroine was Antonette Capone, operator at the suburban Silver Spring, Md., exchange. She reacted swiftly when a woman called in and said "Something horrible has happened... my husband collapsed... I fell."

Miss Capone and her supervisor traced the address and notified the rescue squad. At the given street number, the rescue workers found Mr. and Mrs. Byron S. Huie overcome by carbon monoxide poisoning from their coal gas furnace.

Attendants at Suburban Hospital said both would recover.

Giant Lily Leaves

A waterlily species, the Victoria regia of tropical South America, claims the distinction of having the largest of all known leaves.
