

Size of Pans Affects Result In Baking Cake

Sometimes Recipe Must Be Changed

By META GIVEN

IT'S NOT always possible, as you may have discovered, to use your favorite layer cake recipe with good results in a sheet or loaf pan or cup cake tins. The texture and color of crust usually are disappointing because there's such variation in depth of the batter and surface area exposed to heat.

Not only size of the cake pans are to blame. The batter made by various cake recipes differs greatly in composition and in the amount of volume increase during baking. When you try a recipe for cake in pans of a size not specified, note results on the recipe card for future use.

For instance, the recipe we are giving today was first developed to bake perfectly in two 8-inch round layer cake pans 1-inch deep at 350 degrees F. for the entire baking time. But when baked in one 8-inch square pan two inches deep, a lower temperature had to be used at first.

When baked in a pan 11x1 1/2 inches, the low temperature was used first for level rising but for five minutes less than the deeper square cake. The second period at a higher temperature was also five minutes less for this shallower cake. Both of these cakes baked level and beautifully brown.

FEATHER CAKE

1 1/2 c. cake flour
1 1/2 tsp. baking powder
1/2 tsp. salt
3/4 c. butter or other shortening
2 c. sugar
2 eggs, beaten
1 tsp. vanilla
3/4 c. milk.
Sift flour, measure and resist two or three times with baking powder and salt. Cream butter until soft and smooth, then add sugar gradually and continue creaming until light and fluffy. Add beaten eggs and beat vigorously until velvety and light. Stir in vanilla.
Add flour mixture and milk alternately in four or five portions beginning and ending with flour, beating until just smooth after each addition. Pour into two 8-inch layer pans with bottoms lined with thin plain paper. Bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees F.) for 25 to 30 minutes, or until cake JUST begins to pull away from sides of the pan.
It is easier to overbake than underbake a cake, and baking a minute or two too long is too much for fine cake. Cool five minutes in pans on cake cooler. Then turn out on cake rack to finish cooking. Invert immediately.

Men and Women— Extravagant! No, Girls Say

By ERNEST E. BLAU

DO YOU REMEMBER wearing a $2 million dress last summer? Well, you mightn't realize it, but maybe you did. It may be hanging in your closet right now, and you never even wear it any more! It's that sun-back bolero created by a New York maker which sold 17,000 copies as of last spring, at an average price of $11.66.

Yep, there was something about that dress—the girls just gobbled it up—but did they need it, two million dollars worth? Do they, in fact, need half the dresses they buy?

NINETEEN out of 20 women, according to a study, say they do not think they spend too much on clothes.

A well-dressed wife of course, is an asset to any man—and most men know it, even if they won't admit it. When she wears smart clothes and blossoms out in a new outfit every week or so, like a movie star, you just know her husband's a successful and generous man.

30 Women in Diet
TOKYO—Thirty women have been elected to the Japanese Diet.

Situation: Your new next-door neighbors seem a little stand-offish.

Wrong Way: Keep running over to their house, to borrow, to visit, to talk with them in the yard, etc.—thinking that you will soon have them acting in a less reserved manner.

Right Way: Don't rush things. They may prefer to be on pleasant but not too friendly terms with their neighbors.

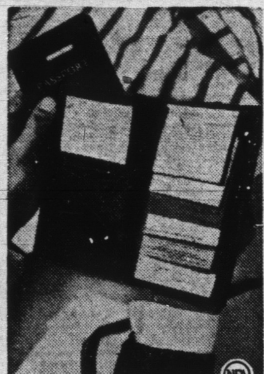

Situation: A dinner guest telephones you to say he will be almost an hour late and asks you to go on and serve dinner without him.

Wrong Way: Tell him you'll wait until he comes, even though it means your dinner will suffer and your other guests will have to wait until quite late to eat.

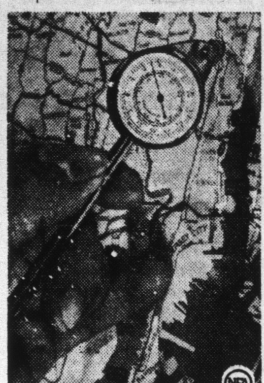

Right Way: Agree to do as he suggests, and save back a plate of food for him to eat when he comes.

The Doctor Says— Smog Fight Not Ignored

By EDWIN P. JORDAN, M. D.

THE AMOUNT of smoke and fumes belched into the air varies widely from place to place. Some cities have many industries, apartments burning soft coal and other sources of air pollution. Other communities do not have the problem at all.

The control of air pollution has not been completely ignored. Recently the American Journal of Public Health contained a series of articles concerning this problem in Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Los Angeles and New York.

The Cleveland report indicated that the problem could be attacked at its point of origin in the industrial plants, in residential neighborhoods and by other means.

The same report warned that the community must not be misled into believing that complete elimination of air pollution is possible. Also, such programs on smoke abatement as can be carried out are costly.

THE PITTSBURGH report stated that 1500 smoking stacks in that city had been cleared in the previous four years, and that this should have had some effect on general conditions.

The Los Angeles experiments indicated that the co-operation of health department officials, engineering and industrial hygiene bureaus working together could accomplish a great deal for air pollution control.

With enormous industrialization of our large cities, it has become a pressing matter which fully merits all the efforts which can be put into the subject by health officials, sanitary engineers, industrialists and community-minded citizens.

British-Made Prints Retain Pretty Pattern

Dresses Designed for International Look

By BARBARA BUNDSCHU

NEW YORK, Nov. 22—Flower-scattered cotton prints designed with a Paris touch, sized to American patterns and made in Britain may give Main St., U. S. A., the look of an international garden party next summer.

The dresses, among the loveliest cottons which have turned up here in many years, are the product of Horrockses, a 158-year-old British cotton textile manufacturer which started making clothes with its fabrics four years ago. They've been sold since then throughout the Empire, in Scandinavia, France and the United States. Prices in American stores on the current collection are estimated at $25 to $72.

The collection for 1949—some 75 costumes—sticks fairly closely to a pretty, feminine pattern. The majority of daytime dresses are softly detailed shirtdress styles with full skirts, padless shoulder lines and the type of tuck and pleat and collar and cuff detail associated in any language with fine dressmaking.

New Dresses Lose Round-Shouldered Look

The majority of the dresses are in fresh colored floral prints, unsuitable for most city wear, but delightfully wearable for all-day casual or dress-up use from the suburbs on out. A few polka dots and small calico prints should be equally fine for hot town days. Housecoats, playclothes and evening dresses are included in the collection.

Short-sleeved dresses lose their round-shouldered look with tricky cuffs or collar treatments. Skirts are flared, gathered and pleated. One day dress has restrained around giving a clever not-quite-a-pleat dash to the skirt. A few dresses are cut slim, usually with fullness at the front hipline.

Ivy, autumn leaves, daisies and geometric designs are used for more nearly two-color prints. One cotton carries an all-over white lace pattern on a gray ground.

We, the Women— Bargain-Buyer Is Christmas Gift Spoiler

Shopping of Women Brings a Clutter

By RUTH MILLETT

THE WOMAN shopper, looking over a table of "greatly reduced" knickknacks—probably reduced because they were so obviously useless—turned to her companion and said: "I think I'll buy a few of these for Christmas gifts. They're such a bargain and I can always figure out somebody to give them to."

That is how and why women clutter up each other's houses with useless gifts.

Two attitudes expressed in those remarks account for most of the "but-whatever-will-I-do-with-it?" gifts people are always receiving. The first is that any time you can find an object that has been reduced in price or looks more expensive than it is—you've got a bargain in a gift. The second is that it doesn't really matter what you give somebody—just so that you give them SOMETHING.

BOTH attitudes take the fun out of giving and receiving. It's really no fun to shop for presents unless you are shopping for just the right present for a particular person.

And it's not very exciting to get a gift that isn't something that was bought with your own particular needs and taste in mind.

So, if you're doing your Christmas shopping early don't make those two mistakes.
