'Meeting More Men' Not Only Solution For the Girl Looking for a Husband

By RUTH MILLETT

"HOW can I meet more men?" a 28-year-old stenographer writes me. She says she left her small home town a year ago to go to work in a city.

Because her question is asked so often by girls who have reached marrying age without any definite prospects of marriage I am answering it in print.

Or, rather, I'm going to point out that I think those girls are asking the wrong question. The secret of getting married isn't usually in managing to meet more men—unless a girl just doesn't know any eligible men at all.

Let's talk about Mary B. for a minute. Mary knows half a dozen young men who have asked her for dates in the last few months.

Two she turned down without giving them a chance. One because he hasn't had as good an education as she. The other because he isn't tall enough to meet her specifications.

Of the four she has dated, there isn't one who doesn't have something wrong with him, according to Mary. She thinks one is "conceited." She doesn't believe another will ever "amount to anything." One is 10 years older than she, which Mary promptly decided was too much difference in age. And the fourth has been divorced, so Mary—although attracted to him—is sure that if he has had one marriage failure he's a bad bet matrimonially.

NOW while Mary is sitting around wishing she knew how to meet more men, she is going to let six prospects get away without ever giving herself time to find out whether she could love one of them or not.

Probably all six of the young men will eventually find wives. Mary may even feel a pang of regret some day if she happens to meet up with one of them happily married to a girl who saw his possibilities and overlooked his shortcomings.

The Doctor Says—

Modern Hospital Setup Traced to Joseph Lister

By EDWIN F. JORDAN, M.D.

THE MODERN spotless operating room, the white-robed and masked doctors and nurses, and the shining and sterilized instruments which everyone recognizes as part of modern surgery, are new.

Much of the credit for these improvements can be traced to Joseph Lister who was born in Essex in 1827.

From the work of Pasteur in France, which established the germ theory of disease, Lister grasped the possible meaning of modern methods of aseptic surgery in which everything which comes near the patient is freed of germs by sterilization. Heat, thorough cleansing with soap and water, and antiseptics are all used to bring this about.
