

Ask Mrs. Manners—

Hopes to Win Back
Remarried Husband

DEAR MRS. MANNERS:

MY HUSBAND and I have been divorced a few years, and they say he has remarried. Another woman broke up my home.

He pays no attention to our daughter. I'd like to contact him to see if he will pay attention to us.

I get so lonesome to see him and I still love him. I always will. How can I become happy and satisfied once again? How can I go about winning him back?

D. C. G., CENTRAL INDIANA.

As long as you completely blame the other woman, not yourself, for failure in marriage there's no use to hope to interest him. What chance would you have? You probably haven't made corrections and you're minus the assurance you had when he belonged to you. Besides, your gloomy shows, D. C. G.—and ex-husbands and new ones don't like gloomy women. If he's married stay away. Get busy working and enjoying him so other people will enjoy you.

Job Hunt

HOW DO I find out the names of the superintendents of the different institutions? I am looking for a job as cook.

A. M. K. The best place to go would be the State Employment Service, 257 W. Washington St.

God-Parents

COULD I ask my adopted child's real parents to be his god-parents without a christening? We have the greatest respect and admiration for them.

MRS. D. S. Adoptive parents usually recommend complete severance of relations with the natural parents. If they keep in the picture the child may feel insecure and torn in its loyalty.

YOU'VE helped a lot of teenagers and I hope you can help me. I'm 16 and went steady with a boy four months. He only took me out four times because he was broke and out of a job. I didn't say anything for I didn't want to lose him. I heard he sat in the show with another girl, so I sat with another boy. My girl friend told him and now he likes her. I gave his ring back but I still like him. Could he stop liking me that quick?

LOVESICK CITY. THE boy I love won't look at me hardly and says he likes a girl who doesn't act like she likes him.

It won't do any good to have me forget him for I have tried.

"18." MY problem is how to get along with people. I go to high school but don't have friends because I don't have feelings for them. F.A.T.

ALWAYS, at school I hear rumors my boy friend takes girls out while I do homework. Do you think someone tries to break us up? I am 16 and I am worried.

Speaks Tomorrow. A. L. Bernd, staff assistant to the vice-president in charge of manufacturing at F. R. Mallory & Co., will lecture on "More Profit Through Cost Control and Reduction" at a meeting of the Indiana University Accounting Department, at 7:30 p.m. tomorrow at Bloomington.

Your Marriage: By Samuel and Esther Kling—

Tears Won't Win Fight

When Females Flatter Him

Q.—What should you do if other women find your husband attractive?

A.—Face the fact, and realize that jealousy will get you nowhere.

Some men are, and always will be, particularly attractive to women. Even after they marry, attentions and flattery of other females.

The person who marries such a man must accept his attraction for women and learn to live with it. Otherwise, she will never know peace of mind.

If the wife makes a scene every time a woman "plays up" to her man, if she scolds and nags him about it, she only succeeds in driving him into the arms of his admirer. No man wants to be blamed and upbraided for something he has little or no control over. And even the best and most faithful man is pleased as punch with the admiration of other women.

So the only sensible way for a wife to cope with this situation is to treat it humorously. Make it a family joke instead of a catastrophe.

Treat your man about his conquests. Tell him you're not surprised that other women find him as appealing as you do. Jost him about being impressed with a child he could see through. Kid him about being a victim of flattery. Let him see the other women and their motives through your eyes, and so dispel his illusions about them. But don't treat any of it as a serious, disrupting influence.

The wife who laughs instead of having hysterics keeps her husband as well as her own emotional balance.

Q.—What are the chances for marriage for women over thirty?

A.—No so good. Actually, there is one chance in a thousand of a girl getting married at the age of
