

FCC Predicts Use of Color In Television

Open to Ideas for Inauguration of New Proposals

WASHINGTON, May 27 (UP)—Color television on present sets may become a reality in the relatively near future, the Federal Communications Commission suggested today.

The commission announced that it now is open to suggestions for use of color television if the plan provides for reception on an "ordinary television receiver with relatively minor modifications."

A decision on whether to let the industry go ahead with color probably will be forthcoming this fall, the FCC said.

Also announced that it hopes to lift the present freeze on applications for new television stations and to open up new ultra-high frequency channels for commercial television broadcast service so more stations can go on the air.

Call Plan Premature

And it said it will look into plans for setting aside certain space on ultra-high frequency and very high frequency bands for different areas of the country.

Commissioner Freda B. Henock disagreed with the rest of the commission, saying the plan considered the FCC announcement premature in view of numerous questions which must be solved first to insure the best development of television air.

The FCC froze applications for new TV stations last Oct. 1 because of limited space on the very high frequency "band."

At present, there are 325 applications awaiting the lifting of the freeze. There are 59 TV stations operating throughout the country, and 61 others are under construction.

Open to Ideas

In announcing that it now is open to ideas for putting color television into commercial use, the commission said it proposes to "afford an opportunity for the submission of proposals looking toward utilization of all television channels for six megacycle monochrome or color on an optional basis."

It emphasized that "if as a result of these proceedings it is shown that color television can be operated satisfactorily within a six megacycle channel, the commission will make provision for licensing stations both in the VHF and UHF bands."

Immediately after the war, the Columbia Broadcasting System urged the commission to authorize color television. But the commission refused at the time on the grounds it had not been perfected.

Goodwill Industries Helps Victims of Tuberculosis

Former Patients Enabled to Earn at Work Geared to Each Person's Limitations

By OPAL CROCKETT

The private worlds of four sick people collapsed a few years ago. Despairingly, they heard their X-rays read. The diagnosis was tuberculosis. Their health shattered, their hopes blasted, they entered sanatoriums, for rest and treatment.

Today, those four persons competently handle jobs at Goodwill Industries, Inc. Products of determination and patience, they've "come back." They're busy and they're happy—they've put their capabilities to work.

The liabilities of illness turned into assets for Louie H. Scheffler, 39. Like any man in his 30's, with a wife and four children, Mr. Scheffler stuck to his job. He was a janitor—but he wasn't happy. He dreamed of becoming a bookkeeper. During his three years at Sunnyside Sanatorium, he did a lot of thinking about bookkeeping—and a bookkeeper he became, at Goodwill. The Scheffler family lives at 204 S. Arsenal Ave.

Mrs. Cleo Roberts, 63, of 1537 W. Ohio St., for 40 years sewed to make her living. That was before her six months at Sunnyside. She has resumed that work at Goodwill, in the reweaving and clothing repair department.

Makes Doll Inspections

Another example where tuberculosis has not permanently disabled a person is Miss Geneva Gilbo, 47, of 1473 S. Belmont St. She worked during her three and a half years at Rockville State Sanatorium. She's working again—at Goodwill—on a contract mailing job.

Miss Marie Smith, 33, who lives at the same address, has a job that attracts many visitors. She works in the doll inspection department. Miss Smith spent two years at Rockville.

These former tuberculosis patients, four of the eight cases of arrested TB at Goodwill, are checked regularly at the sanatoriums.

Goodwill Industries, Inc., workshop for the handicapped is a rare organization in which jobs are adapted to the persons. Employees are referred to the state and county tuberculosis associations, hospitals, the State Department of Vocational Rehabilitation, family service organizations, public health nursing groups, child care agencies, the state division of paroles and corrections, and private individuals. In direct charge of the workers are Howard Lytle, executive secretary, Miss Bula Mae Branson, operations manager, and Mrs. Margaret Foster, personnel director.

ALY AND RITA RAINED IN CANNES, France, May 30 (UP)—Prince Aly Khan and his bride, Rita Hayworth, are expected to leave their million-dollar chateau near here today or tomorrow on a trip to Paris and London. The couple was kept indoors yesterday by rain.
