Eight Local Players Holding Coveted Rating Of Life Bridge Master Bring Fame To Indianapolis As One Of Nation's Top Contract Cities

Edson T. Woods, one of the early life masters, relaxes with a copy of the American Contract Bridge League's bulletin. Roland Buck (inset) just recently won his "spurs."

By JEAN TABBERT

IF CITIES WERE RANKED by their number of bridge experts instead of by population, Indianapolis would be at the top of the heap.

Our Fair City claims eight life bridge masters. That's the highest honor a contract player can receive—an award that comes after winning 300 points in special play. Thirty of these must be won in national tournaments or 50 in regional ones. Pitted against the top players in the United States and Canada, the winners just have to be "good."

The local persons who've made the grade are Edson T. Woods, Lawrence J. Welch, M. Stanley McComas, Mr. and Mrs. George Ryan, Roland Buck, Richard Lee and Joseph Cain. And they value the small gold card that signifies the end of the long, hard pull more than any of the trophies they've won in championship play.

There are only 200 life masters in the country and Canada. As would be expected, New York "owns" a sizable chunk—Philadelphia follows with 19, Chicago has 17, Los Angeles, 10, and Cincinnati, 9. Indianapolis' eight, according to population, gives it reason to puff out its chest.

The gardening winners are Miss Myrtle Shockley and Miss Martha Miller. In the room improvement class, the winners are Miss Martha Miller and in division
