

Blackwood on Bridge— Lecture Has No Effect on 50-Pointer

3 No-Trump Contract Cold Against Defense

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

As you know, Mr. Champion seldom gets the best out of his partners. On the hand before this one he sharply criticized Mr. Abel for not making a lead that would have set the opponents two tricks instead of one.

That verbal barrage was the direct cause of Mr. Abel's failure to make today's hand. The three no-trump contract is ice-cold against any defense. But Mr. Abel was upset and he played carelessly.

Mr. Dale opened the queen of diamonds which was won in the closed hand with the ace. Now the hand looked so easy that Mr. Abel started banging down his high clubs. All he needed was a 3-3 or a 4-2 club break to give him four tricks in the suit; and then, with two diamonds, one heart and two spades, would be enough for game.

However, when Mr. Dale showed out of clubs on the second lead, discarding a small spade, Mr. Abel knew he was in trouble.

Desperation Play

Well, if Mr. Dale had the queen of spades there was still a chance to make the contract. So at the fourth trick a small spade was led toward dummy's jack. No good. The jack was killed by Mrs. Keen's queen. A diamond return was ducked by Mr. Abel, but he had to win the next diamond with his king.

Desperately he laid down the ace and king of spades, hoping for a miracle. But no miracle happened. So he took his eight tricks and gave up for down one. He didn't even try to throw Mrs. Keen in with a heart, hoping she would have to lead clubs to him. As you see that wouldn't have worked anyway.

Don't think Mr. Champion wasn't right in there with one of his longer and more repetitious lectures. All Mr. Abel needed to do was to make sure of winning four club tricks. This he could have done easily by leading his four of clubs at trick two. In that case the nine of clubs on the board would either win the trick or it would force out the jack, making the other four clubs in the closed hand good.

Absolutely right. But Mr. Champion's lecture had no effect on the score recorded for this hand. It was still put down as 50 points for the opposition.

The Doctor Says— Link Flat Feet, Leg Pains.

By EDWIN P. JORDAN, M. D.

ONE OF THE common causes for pains in the legs is foot trouble, particularly flat feet. When the arches have collapsed and are flat new strains appear. These strains are sometimes felt in the feet, but sometimes also they act on the muscles or joints of the legs and cause pain in these areas more than in the feet themselves.

Pain of such origin, should, of course, be treated by correcting the foot trouble. This usually involves more than just wearing a pad or support. Physicians or chiropodists are often able to correct the difficulty so that the pains in the legs will disappear.

Another type of pain in the legs is one which comes on in the calf muscles after walking a few blocks rapidly or climbing stairs. This condition goes under the name of intermittent claudication. It is caused by insufficient supply of blood to the muscles; usually because of "hardening of the arteries" in the legs.

DURING REST the circulation is adequate but exercise increases the need for blood. This condition always requires the advice of a doctor as it may be a sign of hardening of the arteries. A person with this kind of pain should avoid taking so much exercise that it brings on the pain.

Quite a lot of people complain of pains in the legs which occur at night only and which may even wake them up from a sound sleep. This is a puzzling condition but it is probably connected somehow with the circulation of the blood in the legs.

Teen Problems— Most People Have Names

Don't Fill Talk With 'He's, She's'

By JEAN

FOLKS' NAMES and titles help us to distinguish one from the other, you know. But have you fallen into the sloppy habit of sprinkling your talk with a mess of "he's" and "she's" confusing and confounding to your hearers?

"She gave me a D last term," "That's Miss Perkins, your math teacher," "She says dinner is ready," "That's your mother," "She wants to go to the club dance," "That's your current One and Only."

But how can the listeners tell? Oh, they can guess from the context, of course. But the she-and-he habit is definitely bewildering.

IT'S OLD hat and corny, too. The classic example is the old farmer who always called his wife "She" and, after she died, didn't know what name to inscribe on her tombstone!

Yes, refusing to name names makes you seem crude and uncouth. It's not a compliment to the person you're talking about, either. People, as a rule, are proud of their monikers and titles. They want to be known by them.

And naturally, they like to be addressed correctly. It's: "Yes, Mother," and "Thank you, Miss Perkins," and "Hi, Sue." Not a series of surly monosyllables.

Wednesday's Menu

BREAKFAST: Stewed blackberries, ham omelet, enriched toast, butter or fortified margarine, coffee, milk.

LUNCHEON: Tomatoes stuffed with chopped cooked ham and raw cabbage, whole wheat rolls, butter or fortified margarine, applesauce cake, iced tea, milk.

DINNER: Broiled chicken, steamed rice, succotash, spinach timbales, celery and raw carrot sticks, old-fashioned peach shortcake, cream, coffee, milk.

Remove Pads

Shoulder pads should be removed when dresses or suits are sent to be cleaned. Some new pads made of sponge rubber ignite spontaneously in the cleaning process and others dry out.

Wed Tonight

Miss Mary Christine Griebelbauer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Griebelbauer, 4107 E. Washington St., will become the bride of Charles E. Evans, son of Mr. and Mrs. Russell Firestone, Greencastle, tonight in the Garfield Park Evangelical and Reformed Church.

FABRICS TOOK THE CENTER OF THE STAGE THIS AFTERNOON

as Black's presented two showings of campus fashions in the store auditorium. Styles in the show included those featured in Harper's Bazaar.

The fabric most frequently on stage was corduroy. It appeared in slacks, jerseys, skirts, raincoats, dresses, study coats and jackets. In the latter, it was equally at home in boxy and fitted styles.

One corduroy suit had a short, fitted jacket lined with striped cotton matching the blouse worn with it. Final proof of corduroy's popularity came with its use in a floor-length evening dress.

VELVETEEN appeared almost as frequently as corduroy. It was used for hat-and-handbag sets as well as costumes. Perhaps its most effective use was in several short flaring jackets designed to be worn belted or unbelted.

One of these, in gunmetal, had a yellow-gold lining and was accompanied by a yellow-gold blouse and gunmetal wool skirt.

Like corduroy, velveteen also appeared in an evening frock—a nifty purple one draped at the hipline and with a full floating back panel.

FLANNELS, in plaids and plains, also were numerous. So were jerseys... an outstanding one being Toni Owen's beige jersey separate skirt and turtle-necked blouse.

Eat Well for Less — Soft Drink Julep for Hot Days

Use Carbonated Beverages Freely

By GAYNOR MADDOX

WHEN IT'S your turn to have the crowd for a summer evening get-together, surprise them with this cooling "Soft Drink Julep."

Carbonated beverages speed up respiration and moisture evaporation and also offer a number of possibilities for unique services. The "Soft Drink Julep" is just one.

SOFT DRINK JULEP

Eight bottles (seven-ounce size) lemon-lime soda, two lemons, two limes, fresh cherries, fresh mint sprigs.

Chill the bottles of lemon-lime carbonated beverage in the refrigerator. When very cold, pour the contents of four bottles into a freezing tray; add the juice of the lemons and limes, mix gently and freeze until almost solid. To serve, scoop generous portions of the frozen beverage into tall glasses; garnish with a fresh cherry and a sprig of mint. With each glass, serve a bottle of chilled lemon-lime soda which is to be poured over the frozen mixture.

APRICOT PUNCH

One can apricot nectar, two large bottles gingerale, fresh mint sprigs.

Chill the gingerale and the apricot nectar. Pour contents of one bottle of gingerale into ice cube tray and freeze. To serve, fill tall glasses one-quarter full of the apricot nectar, add several cubes of frozen gingerale and fill the glasses with chilled gingerale. Mix lightly, add a sprig of fresh mint and serve at once.

Wall Storage Unit Allows Full Use of Space in Crowded Room

A storage wall fitted from corner to corner and over the door in this bedroom serves as a wardrobe, linen closet and chest.

By HUGH EVANS, NEA Staff Writer

NEW YORK, Aug. 9.—The overflow that lurks under beds, hides in fireplaces and climbs to the ceiling in bedroom corners is an all-too-familiar problem for today's householders in cramped homes or apartments.

As an interior designer specializing in budget decorating, the plea I hear most frequently is "How can we possibly increase our storage facilities, get rid of this clutter, make the bedroom more livable and do it all on a budget?"

The problem isn't as hopeless as it sounds. Case in point is the redecorated bedroom of a young client whom we shall call Mrs. X. Contributing to the clutter and near-stifling aspect of the bedroom were badly draped windows and doors leading to the terrace which added to the "chopped up" look: two dressers, two built-in chests and a too-skimpy rug. The limited color line of the rug "broke up" the floor space and did its noble best to make the room look smaller and crowded.

In redesigning the room, we tripled the existing storage space range of widths and heights, provided by one small closet and increased the apparent room size by simple decorating devices any wall space.
