

Your Marriage: By Samuel and Esther Kling— Be Sure Prospective Mate Gets Along With Neighbors

Q—Is it important to marry someone who gets along well with other people?
A—Very much so! Indeed, all too often men and women overlook this vital factor in choosing a mate. Yet how well a person mixes with people actually can make or break a marriage.

Take your family and friends, for example. Think how much smoother your married life will be if your spouse gets along well with them. Certainly, you'll expect him to see your family often and you'll expect him to accept at least some of your friends. But if your partner is unsocial, relatives and friends will become areas of disagreement in your marriage, as they are in so many others, and your entire relationship will be considerably weakened.

How well your partner gets along with your neighbors also will add or detract from your happiness. For an unsocial person is not usually content with disliking and avoiding other people himself. He expects his partner to do the same and often makes an issue of it when his mate becomes friendly with those whom he has rejected. But it's not pleasant to have to live aloof from your neighbors when mere proximity calls for some degree of friendliness.

Your Job— Ex-Teacher Mulls Return to Work

Wants to Deal With People, but Not Teach

I prepared myself, while in college, to be a teacher and taught two years in a small high school. Marriage stopped my teaching career. Five years later my husband died. I have no children nor any home responsibilities. I do not want to teach but would like a job in which I could deal with people. What would you suggest?

By JAMES GRAYSON

Most everywhere you work you have to deal with people. There are many things you could do provided there were job openings. Some of these might not interest you. You should, therefore, try to decide what general field or direction your interests lie.

If you have a personal job problem, write James Grayson, in care of The Times.

Some phase of social service work might interest you. The field is large and the possibilities are many. Many of the jobs require special training. Some are filled through special examinations. Some openings come through friends or through someone who knows the applicant's capacity and abilities.

You could fill certain jobs in business and industry if there happened to be openings. Usually these jobs are filled from within the organization and an outsider doesn't stand much chance. You might first have to get into a business or industrial establishment in some capacity such as clerk-typist, or stenographer. You might even have to take some special business course to qualify.

The local office of the Indiana State Employment Service, 257 W. Washington St., has counselors to whom you can go for suggestions and advice about the local job possibilities. The Division of State Personnel, State House, can tell you about the various positions over the state which are filled through competitive examinations and give you the qualifications required of applicants for these positions.

The Council of Social Agencies, Lemcke building, can give you an idea of the various social agencies operating in Marion County and their functions.

Through the above contacts you will learn something of the size and scope of social service work as well as further contacts you should make in your attempt to find out which field interests you most.

Even more important, is the effect sociability has on your partner's business success. Certainly, the good mixer is usually more successful in his business or profession. We all know men of high intelligence and great ability who never seem to get the "breaks." Their only handicap, apparently, is their ability to get along well with people.

On the other hand, we all know men of average intelligence and talent who have become extremely successful chiefly because they have the happy faculty of making friends easily. And whether a man becomes successful or not is important to marital happiness, as surveys point out.

Q. Is it equally important for a wife to be sociable?

A. Yes. What applies to the man, applies with equal force to the woman. And this is true even as regards the man's business or professional success.

The wife who is a good mixer is a valuable asset to her husband's career. If she's pleasant and gracious to people, she'll gain the good will which so often determines a man's success.

It's worth remembering, too, that getting along well with people is an important sign of emotional maturity. And the emotionally mature person always finds more satisfaction in marriage and brings greater happiness to his mate than the one who is immature.

That's why you ought to keep sociability in mind when judging a prospective mate.

STOPS LAXATIVES— FEELS BETTER!

"Have been eating KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN 3 years and it's wonderful! Now I don't ever need a laxative, (and) so much better. I've told plenty of others too!"
Mrs. Jerry Russell, Route 8, Marysville, Tenn. Many other grateful ALL-BRAN users write the same. You may be helped, too, if constipated due to lack of bulk in the diet; start eating an ounce of crisp, tasty ALL-BRAN daily, drink plenty of water; if not satisfied after 10 days, send empty box to Kellogg's, Battle Creek, Mich.
