Invents Electronic Blood Cell Counter

MATTOON, Ill., Sept. 8 (UPI) — Dr. Glenn C. Wolf, 34, a general practitioner, said today he has invented an electronic blood cell counter.

Dr. Wolf said that as an intern at Santa Barbara, Calif., Cottage Hospital in 1939 he became bored with the routine task of counting white and red blood cells under the microscope and began work on his invention.

He said the device counts the cells by reflected flashes of light on a photoelectric cell as they flew through a tiny pipette.
