We, the Women— Others' Faults Easy to See

Most of Us Consider
Ourselves 'Average'

By RUTH MILLETT

A PSYCHOLOGY professor at the University of California at Los Angeles is amazed over the results of a recent test he gave his students, which brought to light the fact that the students thought of themselves as "average" but rated other students as "maladjusted."

Well, if he tries the same type test on Mr. and Mrs. America he'll probably discover that most of them harbor a whole set of similar convictions.

Mr. and Mrs. America are firmly convinced they spend their income wisely. But just get 'em started on their friends and neighbors. They're always making mistakes, and why they paid so much for them harbor a whole set of similar convictions.

Mr. and Mrs. America will never be able to understand. Mr. and Mrs. A. also think they're pretty happy. But they aren't so sure about their friends. They can't figure out why some of them married each other in the first place. And they can't figure out how the others put up with each other. And when they hear that the Joneses are getting a divorce, they "aren't a bit surprised."

AND TAKE their kids. Mr. and Mrs. A. think they've done a pretty good job of bringing up their own. But they could sure tell the neighbors on both the right and left and across the street a thing or two. When they start a sentence beginning "What that kid needs" you can be sure that kid belongs to somebody else.

And so it goes. The college student who thinks he's average but is convinced the other students in the class are maladjusted for one reason or another isn't any funnier than the rest of us.

We're all sure that we're doing the best we can—and always wondering why the other fellow can't see the mistakes he's making.

But at least it gives us something to talk about.

VELVET, SO LONG associated with the robes of royalty, is really reigning over fall fashions. It's used for complete costumes... for accessories... even for trimming on sturdy tweeds. Here it is used to accent the pleated flounce and cuffs of a sheer black wool dress. The flounce gives hemline flare to the New York-designed frock. Silhouette slimness is emphasized by the way the sleeves are cut in one with the bodice. The frock (about $60) will be at Raymond Cooper's soon.—By Louise Fletcher.

Teen Problems— Boys Can Be Worst Gossips

By JEAN

GOSSIP is supposed to be a feminine trait. But don't let it fool you. Boys can be worse gossips than girls—oh, definitely. We're talking about the kiss-and-tell guys. They're bad news, aren't they?

Yes, it's a fact that certain teen boys like to boast of their successes. If one of these characters finds a girl free with her kisses and carresses, he's bound to spread the word. Even moderately right guys are guilty sometimes. Not your One and Only, we hope. Not your best and oldest pal. But plenty of other fellows—especially new acquaintances who don't know you and your family.

YOU SEE, men are expected to show slightly wolfish tendencies; women get talked about for free and easy ways. No matter how modern and up-to-date we are, we can't get away from this age-old standard. So, gals, be smart. Don't be lavish with your lovin', unless you're prepared to take the consequences. A reputation for petting is easy to earn and hard to live down.

And, guys, please. Try to curb your masculine braggadocio. After all, kiss-and-tell is gossip—as old-womanish as chit-chat at a Ladies' Sewing Circle.

Don't Add New Feathers to Old

Patches of new material on an old dress won't make it a new, up-to-date model. Neither will a few new feathers in an old pillow make it comfortable and like new again.

The new feathers will be lost in the mass of old, worn-out and lifeless feathers, which are no longer able to support the head and neck comfortably.
