

5 Air Crashes In 10 Years Still Mystery

CAA Has Set Good Record of Determining Cause

WASHINGTON, Sept. 30.—Only five unexplained fatal airplane accidents are found in the Civil Aeronautics Administration files since 1940.

Search of the files was made following allegations that a bomb meant to kill the wife of a Quebec jeweler caused the crash of a Quebec Airways plane Sept. 9 with the death of 19 passengers and a crew of four.

The CAA is the policeman of the U. S. airways and goes into each scheduled and certified non scheduled crash with an expert crew of investigators.

Record of Crashes

Here is the record of unexplained crashes during the present decade:

1949—None.

1948—March 10: A regular Delta Airlines plane, flying out of Chicago, crashed shortly after takeoff, killing eight passengers, injuring one, and bringing death to the crew of four. It climbed steeply, then dipped sharply to the ground. No evidence of mechanical or structural defect could be found.

Nov. 4—A Pacific Alaska two-motored plane, making a routine hop in Alaska, disappeared with 15 passengers and two crew members, and has not been located.

1947—May 30: An Eastern Airlines plane, en route from Newark to Miami, suddenly went out of control and crashed in Maryland, killing 49 passengers and its crew of four. There has been no explanation CAA can find for this accident.

1946—A non scheduled airline, Winged Cargo, Inc., two-motor type plane, flying from San Jose, Costa Rica, to Jamaica, disappeared with five passengers and two crew members.

1941—An American Airlines DC-3, flying just over the border into Canada, crashed near Sheper, Ont., killing 17 passengers and three crew members. No indication as to cause.

U. S. airlines are making a safety record this year that gives CAA experts little investigation work to do. Airline executives have their fingers crossed, in the hope this will be one of the best years they have ever had.

Helldivers Hurlled At Greek Reds

American Officer in Charge of Operations

By GEORGE WELLES

Times Foreign Correspondent

LARISSA, Greece, Sept. 30.—

The airborne punch that is keeping Greece's Communists on the run is supplied by 40 iron-blue helldivers working out of this well-worn bomber strip.

The Greeks like this American carrier plane because, as one Greek pilot says, "It's like your washing machines and your electrical egg-beaters; it saves labor."

The helldiver can carry two tons of bombs, rockets and greasy flame-spreader. The spitfire, Greece's only fighter-bomber till now, can carry only a half-ton.

"We do four trips to the front in one," said one pilot.

Though the Grammos Mountain complex of the guerrillas is broken, the helldivers are called upon for special jobs on the various holdout positions scattered all over Greece.

"Our intention," says Lt. Col. Dan Riva of Hartford, Conn., an 8th Air Force 8-17 veteran now advising Greek operations, "is to clobber them hard wherever they show their heads."
