State Secretary Pays West Berlin Official Visit

By United Press
U. S. Secretary of State Dean Acheson at Berlin today promised American help for Berliners and other European peoples in opposing Soviet attacks on freedom.

Acheson, told a press conference: "The United States can help those people who are determined to help themselves. We are determined to help you."

After a quick lunch with American and German authorities in Berlin, Mr. Acheson made a brief appearance at the city hall of West Berlin. There he received the assurance of Mayor Ernst Reuter that the German people would work hand in hand with the United States in solving their common problems.

Hall His Visit

"I want you to go back to your government fully convinced that we are standing with you in the common fight," Mr. Reuter said. "And just as we can depend on you, so can you rely on us. Your visit here is proof that Berlin has not been abandoned and will not be abandoned."

Mr. Acheson planned to take off tonight for Frankfurt and Washington.

But during his stay, he was scheduled to meet all the major anti-Communist German leaders, American, British and French officials, and even some of the Russians who want to force Berlin into the new Communist satellite state of Eastern Germany.

West Berlin leaders hailed Acheson's visit as a big prestige boost for the west Berlin city government in its struggle for power with the East Berlin Communist government.

Father Frees Kidnaped Girl At Gunpoint

Student Confesses But Doesn't Know Why, He Tells Police

Time—State Service
ANGOLA, Nov. 14—A 22-year-old Tri-State College student today said he "didn't know why" he chloroformed and kidnaped a sleeping 9-year-old girl.

The student, Benedict L. Driscoll Jr., Newport, R. I., has signed a statement admitting he took the young daughter of restaurant owner Howard Morton from a parked car outside her father's restaurant, police said.

He also admitted chloroforming the girl when she awakened and carrying her to a storeroom above the restaurant. He was discovered there by Mr. Morton who investigated noises in the storeroom.

Denies Criminal Attack

Police said Driscoll denied criminally attacking the girl and quoted doctors as saying the girl had not been raped.

Police Chief Paul Tague in charge of the investigation said he believed the father's capture of Driscoll at gunpoint thwarted an attempted attack.

Mr. Morton, who operates a restaurant at the south edge of Angola said his 9-year-old daughter Marilyn and her sister Lois, 11, were sleeping in his car parked outside the restaurant about 1 a. m. Mr. Morton was closing the restaurant.

Hears Thumping Noise

He said he heard a "thumping" noise in a former ballroom over the cafe, now used as a supply room. He went out to his car to get a gun and flashlight to investigate.

At that time, Mr. Morton said, he saw his daughter, Lois, was still asleep in the front seat. He did not notice Marilyn was missing from the back seat.

The father went up the outside stairway leading to the dance floor and flashed a light through the door. He said he saw a man jump up and run behind some boxes.

He pushed the door open and warned the man "come out or I'll shoot." He said Driscoll came out and he then saw the girl.

Waitress Calls Police

The father said he did not recognize the girl immediately. He said Driscoll kept repeating: "I swear to God I haven't hurt her." He kept the gun on Driscoll and ordered him to carry the girl back into the restaurant, where a waitress called police.

Driscoll admitted seeing the girl as he prowled around the restaurant. He said he started to carry her and that he put a chloroform-soaked cloth over her face when she awoke. He refused to say where he got the chloroform.

The girl was taken to LaGrange County Hospital for examination and later returned home. Her mother said she was still running a high temperature today. The chloroform caused congestion on the lungs which doctors feared might lead to pneumonia.

Her mother said the girl was also suffering shock and that she frequently woke up screaming yesterday and last night.

100-Foot Crane Boom Ready To Snatch Giant Terrapin

"We've got that seven feet of water so riled you can't see your hand under the surface."

"If everything goes right, we'll have the lake dry in a week, and there will sit the Beast of Churubusco, I hope. Then we'll net him, hook him to the cable and let the crane pull him in."

Won't Happen Again

"We tried netting him before but he either slipped away or the net broke. That won't happen this time," the harried Mr. Harris opined. "We had a net made specially, cost us $554. It took a lot of rope to make one 200 feet long and 32 feet wide, but you've got to have equipment."

Capturing costs skyrocketed when homemade tools proved ineffective and modern machinery were abandoned for modern machinery.

Consequently, the Churubusco Merchant's Association, sponsors of the great quest, felt a heavy drain on pocketbooks. Although they realized profits on increased trade this summer from curious thousands, they decided to ease the current financial burden.

25 Cents a Head

For the past three week-ends spectators have helped shoulder costs paying 25 cents a head admission to the grounds.

"Even then, we're just breaking even," Trapper Harris moaned. "But people are just plain crazy. It rained all day yesterday but a thousand munched around in the wet and muck just to look."

"Can't understand the women-folk. You'd think they never heard of boots. There they stood in high heels sunk in the ground, the mud pushing up into the open toes."

Plan: Vacation

If the search succeeds, the Merchant's Association will exhibit the surly snapper in Churubusco and over the state. And Mr. Harris, who has vacationed from farming since March, will vacation from turtles in Florida.

"That is, if he's there when the lake goes dry," Mr. Harris said. "Otherwise, I'll be going back to farming in a mighty big hurry."

Right now it looks like clear sailing. Only Thursday, however, the tedious search almost ended in tragedy. Mr. Harris slipped from a catwalk near the pump into the cone of the lake bottom.

"Thought I was a goner," he commented. "The more I struggled, the deeper I sank. It was up to my chest when the boys formed a human chain and pulled me out."

"Mighty dangerous business, this turtle trapping."
