Ask Mrs. Manners

Dress Like a Lady, Wolves Won't Howl

DEAR MRS. MANNERS:

If YOU girls want boys to treat you like ladies you have to look and act like ladies, dress properly, make acquaintances in ladylike ways, and use the manners of a refined, poised lady. A lady in dress and manner may go anywhere unharmed.

Boys usually wait for "invitations." In ways unknown to you, you may invite such attentions. Look in the mirror. Remove half your makeup and three-fourths of your costume jewelry. Dress as if you're going to church. Believe me, boys like girls who go to church and look it. They are the girls they marry. I heard some boys agree they like strapless evening gowns—on the other fellow's girl. That type of thing is great stuff in Paris and New York, but too conspicuous in the communities in which most of us live, unless we crave attention.

The world sees only your physical characteristics. They show your innate qualities don't. A new acquaintance will judge and remember you by your appearance.

My best friend is a sweet girl and high-minded girl but sadly her taste in dress is for the extreme. Her plunging neckline viewed from over a bridge table are short of disaster. Her color combinations are brilliant; her stark back is startling and revealing. Remember, she is an innocent girl but she doesn't see that she invites the repulsive attention that she gets.

Take my own case. I dress moderately ordinarily, particularly when out alone. A friend gave me a sophisticated, eye-catching cocktail hat which I wore downtown. To my amazement men tried to pick me up. I went home and straight to the mirror. The only thing unusual about me was the hat. I fearfully packed it away and public attention ceased.

Let Mrs. Manners and readers of the column share your problems. Write in care of The Times, 214 W. Maryland St.
