

Australians To Settle Their War Of Ideologies At Polls

Fate of Socialism Is Election Issue

Liberal and Country Party Hammers At Labor's Attempt at Planned Economy

By FRED B. HUBBARD, Times Foreign Correspondent
CANBERRA, Australia, Dec. 9—Tomorrow some 4.9 million Australians will march to their polling places to vote, in effect, for a way of life.

If they vote their Labor government back into power, then they will clearly endorse its trend toward the planned economy of the Socialist state.

If they vote for the Liberal and Country Party which promises to halt the Socialist trend, they will be choosing a brand of free enterprise.

Socialism thus is emerging as the biggest election issue in the campaigns now being waged bitterly throughout this nation of eight million souls.

The laborites, in power for eight years, are campaigning on a "judge-us-by-our-record" theme. It is this very record that is providing the opposition forces with their most potent campaign gun.

Official Policy
Hammering the theme that labor means socialism, the opposition points with glee to the Labor Party's sole objective: readjustment in the party's platform last year.

This objective calls for the Reds.

"socialization of industry, production, distribution and exchange." And it is still the Labor Party's official policy.

The opposition finds powerful arguments, too, in the government's several nationalization attempts since 1946.

In these unsuccessful attempts, labor sought to nationalize banks, airlines and medical services. It also established a government monopoly over television and FM radio broadcasting.

Labor's big problem now seems to be how to explain away this part of the record. In most cases, the government went ahead with nationalization plans over public protest.

Opposition forces promise the voters they will make it constitutionally impossible for any Australian government to pass a nationalizing measure without a referendum.

Another election bait the Liberal and Country Parties are casting is positive anti-Communist action. They promise to outlaw the Communist Party and rid unions and the public service of Labor, however, appears content to follow its policy of keeping Reds out in the open and under a watchful eye.

The compulsory military training issue is another factor certain to strongly influence election results.

The opposition—with the backing of war veterans—proposes to institute UMT to build up Australia's tiny defense forces.

Labor wants no truck with UMT—"except in a national emergency." It takes the view that Australia's limited man power can better be utilized in increasing lagging production.

The opposition's biggest worry seems to be the fact that a great many Australians have come to think the labor government has in general given them a pretty good deal, economically.

Best Chance

One Liberal Party campaign manager put it this way: "The average Australian figure, he's better off for wages and living conditions than he was 10 years ago." He admitted that the opposition faced a "helluva job" trying to convince voters they might be good and drifts on to find an better off under a Liberal government.

"Labor's got us beaten on the economic side," said he. "That's why we're pushing the Socialist theme so hard. It's our best chance."

Australia has full employment. It is expanding its social services program. Farm incomes are high. There are a number of development projects and a huge migration scheme. All this for greater individual enterprise, laborites claim credit for.

At the same time they have failed to lick a number of major problems. Spiraling costs, a housing lag, and chronic shortages are a few.

Opposition parties offer no cure-all for such problems. They stress more encouragement to private enterprise to overcome them.

Moreover, although plumping for greater individual enterprise, they do not forget that the Australian likes a government welfare program.

In fact, the Liberal and Country Parties profess eagerness to improve rather than pare the existing social services setup.

People are taking the political campaigning quietly. But they're following closely the form of the two central figures involved.

One is 64-year-old Prime Minister Joseph B. Chifley, known to his countrymen as "Chif." As Australia's treasurer, he's also

"Mr. Taxes."

The Liberals' hope is Robert G. Menzies, 55, a former Prime Minister, and present opposition leader. He'll become Prime Minister again if the Liberal-Country Party coalition forces return to power.

Copyright, 1949, by The Indianapolis Times and Chicago Daily News, Inc.

Woman Missionary Saving Children of Wild Tribesmen

BREVES, Brazil, Dec. 9—Mrs. Eva Banner, 31, a medical missionary to one of the world's most backward Indian tribes, is having a field day at spreading marital bliss.

The Kuben Kran Kren Indians of the Xingu River district in central Brazil are too slow on the uptake to get much out of the missionary work except the family happiness it brings. She shoves on.

Mrs. Banner, an Irisher from Dublin, says it works this way:

"When a tribesman takes a woman, everything depends upon their first child. If it dies at birth, the man decides his wife is no longer good and drifts on to find an infant mortality rate has been up to 75 per cent during certain periods. My hardest work is seeing that the first child is saved."

"I work day and night, sometimes for a week, to save the first baby realizing it means saving a family. During the past two years, ing religion with this restricted

I have had excellent luck. With first-rate medical equipment from England, I have saved 90 per cent of the first born."

She and her husband, Horace

J. Banner, also a missionary, have returned to civilization for a month for her to have a baby.

Now, that the baby is four weeks old, they are returning to the wilderness around the Xingu

River, a tributary of the Amazon.

The KKK Indians have a first time. Saving the first born vocabulary of less than 100 words, says Mrs. Banner. Teach-have failed.

STRAUSS SAYS—STORE HOURS—TOMORROW—SATURDAY 9 TILL 6

On Other Days—Our Usual Year 'Round Hours, 9:30 Till 5

THIS IS IT—By far the greatest Christmas activity in 96* years is coming through the doors of the Man's Store

*L. Strauss & Co., Inc., was founded in 1853.

It indicates, as nothing else can—that more and more people are leaning toward fitness, taste and quality in their giving—it presages that the number of men to become possessed of the perfectly natural inclination to open certain gift boxes first—will be tremendously increased!

The store with its spacious quarters—and with its vastly expanded services—works smoothly under pressure—it meets the challenge of this new, almost fantastic, holiday record, comfortably, within the framework of its usual store hours.

But even with our enlarged facilities, even if each of us had three hands—there comes a time, particularly on Saturdays, when it's well to stretch the store hours a bit—to keep service from getting out of hand!

The Store is open Saturday from 9 till 6—Come in—and bring the Family! You'll all enjoy the experience.

L. STRAUSS & COMPANY, Inc., THE MAN'S STORE

BRIEF
very brief
Directory

FIRST FLOOR
Men's Furnishings
Gift Objects
Smoker's Corner
Blum's Candies
Sportswear
Robes

ON THE MEZZANINE
are Men's and Boys' Shoes—Gift Slippers—
(Gift Wrapping)

SECOND FLOOR
Men's and Young Men's Clothing
Slacks
Raincoats
Sport Jackets

THIRD FLOOR
WOMEN'S SHOPS
Suits and Coats
Blouses, Robes
and Joseph Shoe
Salon

FOURTH FLOOR
WOMEN'S SHOPS
Sportswear
Dresses
and Hats

FIFTH FLOOR
Layaway

SIXTH FLOOR
THE BOYS' FLOOR
Senior Hall
Boy Scouts' Shop
(Also a Me-Too
Shop for little gals)
The famous SPORTSMAN'S FLOOR—for the hunter and fisherman and golfer.

LUGGAGE FOR MEN AND WOMEN
SEVENTH FLOOR
General Offices
THE TRAVEL BUREAU