At Acorn Farm we have a spring fed stream which tempts our many campers to make all types of small boats. The familiar rear-paddle shingle boat powered by rubber bands is one of the favorites, but as usual whenever we make anything, some one makes a "super" model.
Bob Hansen, one of our counselors, combined many features of the other boats and turned up with the whittled model illustrated above.
Two shingle strips 15 inches long and one and one-half inches wide were whittled to a point at one end and tacked together with three cross braces each five inches long and a half inch wide. The middle one has a five-inch splinter mast. Three four-blade paddles were made by using two-and-a-half-inch pieces about an inch wide, notched together at the center. Two rubber bands provide the power for each paddle wheel. Strings were tied from the mast to make it look more like a boat. When you wind up the paddles and release them, your boat will chug away. NEVER PLAY NEAR DEEP UNGUARDED WATER. You can use this boat in a bath tub, too. TOMORROW—Grow Your Own Cucumber Trick.
