

Teen Wool Jerseys Feature Velvet Trim

This season's smart velvet touch for women's fashions is reflected in both of these "Abby Teen" frocks for the younger set. Deeper toned velvet trim, covered buttons and bodice yoke, highlight the all-occasion wool jersey/shirt. In sizes 10-16, it comes in red, dark green, gold, kelly and tangerine. ($10.98.) The trim wool jersey (right), available in the same colors and sizes, features large pockets with blending velvet trim picked up in the pointed collar and covered buttons. (Also $10.98.) Both are from Wasson's Fifth Floor Youth Center.

Blackwood on Bridge— Player's Plight Is Blight From Surplus Good Cards

THERE'S SUCH a thing as having too good a hand. West found himself in this strange position in today's deal.

If he could have transferred the ace of diamonds to his partner's hand, for example, that would have been the necessary entry for a lead through one of declarer's black kings—and then the contract could have been set without difficulty.

As it was, West found himself on the spot for a lead right at the start. He thought for quite a while and then came up with the only lead that would not present South with a trick.

He led the six of trump. After taking a look at the dummy he justly congratulated himself on his decision.

Satisfaction Short

BUT HIS SENSE of satisfaction was short-lived. He fell down badly on his play at trick two. After South won the first trick with the king of hearts, he led the deuce of diamonds.

Desperate to have East gain the lead, West ducked. He hoped East had the queen of diamonds and that South had the jack and would finesse the 10 spot on this trick.

This forlorn hope crashed when South put up dummy's king, which won. The 10 of diamonds was returned. East covered with the jack. South made the very good play of the six and West had to win with the ace. Again he was in the spot. This time, however, he had only two choices—both bad.

Leads Away

HE HAD nothing left but clubs and spades and had to lead away from the ace-queen in one of those suits. He chose to play the ace and another club. South won the second club with the king, laid down the good queen of diamonds and threw a spade from the board.

He then conceded one spade trick and the rest of the cards in dummy were good.

West should have known that the only safe out-card in his whole hand was the five of diamonds. He should have taken the ace of diamonds at trick two and led back the five.

South, even though he held the queen of diamonds, would then have found it impossible to avoid the loss of three more tricks in the black suits.

Canasta—

The Yen to Meld Is Restrained by Minnie the Melder

By OSWALD JACOBY

MINNIE the melder dealt and turned up a four spot. The score was opponents 3880, Minnie and her partner Hold-up Harry 2470.

The first three discards in order were 4-4-3. Minnie's hand consisted of a joker, a deuce and ace-king-king-jack-nine-eight-eight-four-four. She drew a five spot.

At this point Minnie could have melded her 90 in any one of several ways but did restrain her melding impulses. Minnie loves to meld but even Minnie is not going to use her two wild cards to make a first round meld when there is no urgent reason to do so. Minnie simply discarded the five.

The next player drew and discarded a queen. Hold-up Harry placed a joker-nine-nine and two queens on the table, added the queen from on top of the discard pile, took the rest of the pile into his hand and discarded one of the three fours.

Big Hand the Goal

Without seeing Harry's full hand we can't be sure that his discard of one of the fours was correct. However, the chances are that the play was all right. Except in very unusual circumstances when you start by taking a fair-sized discard pile and the opponents need 120 you should forget about playing for out in a hurry and try to play for a big hand. With Hold-up Harry that particular play was automatic.

Generous George, who played next drew and discarded a nine right in the face of the meld of joker-nine-nine on the table. George held a poor hand and that before the hand was over his opponents would probably make several canastas anyway. Hence, he did not worry at all about letting them make a canasta in nines quickly.

Play Not Spectacular

Minnie took the nine with a polite "Thank you, George," and added it to the nine meld. Then she melded the four with the two in her hand and added her own

This made a meld of four nines and two jokers and left her side and one from a canasta in nines. Minnie discarded her jack and her hand now was ace-king-king-8-8-2.

This was not a good play. In my next article I will analyze that play and describe the further progress of the hand. Actually, this play started a sequence that wound up disastrously for Minnie, but the principal blame for that sequence is due to plays made later on by her partner.

Mr. Jacoby is unable to answer individual questions on canasta from readers. However, he will include the most frequently asked questions in his column.
