

INDIAN LANDS.

We deem the late purchase of Indian lands in the state of Ohio, one of the most important events which has happened in the western country for many years. Although it was thought expedient on the conclusion of the war to consent, that the savages should retain all the lands which belonged to them at its commencement; yet it was foreseen, that by a purchase after peace, we might obtain all the advantages of a most successful campaign. The event has justified these expectations. The purchase lately made includes most of that wilderness between the settlements in Ohio & Detroit which was the battle field during most of the last war, the scene of glory and disaster. It includes a great quantity of excellent land and will doubtless settle with the greatest rapidity. The communication between the northern Indians and the British at Malden, will be almost entirely cut off and that frontier will be filled up with an active, hardy population ready to defend their country and punish wrongs.

In Mississippi the acquisition of territory is likely to be not less extensive, though not equally important. By a late arrangement with the Cherokees, that tribe have leave to exchange their lands on the east for others on the west of the Mississippi, and it is believed that most of them will remove. The country thus left vacant will soon fill up with white population and together with the territory conquered from the Creek, which is peopling with unexampled rapidity, will secure our southern borders from Indian hostility, and strengthen Louisiana against the attacks of a foreign enemy. All the Indians in that quarter will in a few years cross the Mississippi, adopt the manners of civilized life or become extinct. On the south we now want nothing to complete our security, but possession of the Floridas and that we must have, "peaceably if we can, forcibly if we must."

A petition to Congress is circulating in Missouri, praying that that territory may be admitted into the union as one of the U. States. Their population is stated to be about 40,000 and we know that it must be increasing very rapidly. Kentucky, which a few years ago was "the land of promise," has now become an old state and sends forth her emigrants by thousands. The current from this state and through it, is almost exclusively to the Missouri territory. We can travel scarcely half a dozen miles on any important road leading in that direction without finding many families with all their substance travelling to that distant land. Distant it is, even from this place, which is almost four hundred miles further west than "traveller Brown" extended his laborious and satisfactory researches in the "western country."

Thus our empire has risen from the late war with greater elasticity than ever, and like a vigorous tree which the winds of heaven have assailed in vain, pushes forth shoots to the north, and south, and west, increasing its strength and adding to its beauty. Kentucky, herself almost in infancy, will soon give birth to a new state, and instead of sitting alone in the wilderness fatigued with constant watchfulness, find herself in a blooming paradise, surrounded by children and friends.

Such, O Americans, are the effects of liberty, and of a system of government worthy the admiration of Angels. If on creation's morn, they sang with admiration and wonder, to see the universe start into motion and worlds roll round their centres in majestic harmony, at the command of Omnipotence, how great must be their delight to see the moral elements reduced to order and beauty by the virtue and intelligence of finite man!

Frankfort Argus.

Look at this ye fair Damsels.

A society of young men in the state of Connecticut have adopted into their constitution an article to this effect—"that no member shall be permitted to marry, under any circumstances, an illiterate woman." A committee is appointed to examine any female candidate for matrimony before she can be admitted to a connection with any of the society.—The consequence is that upwards of 40 old maids, have moved within the space of a year, to the western country in despair.
