TRAINING OF YOUNG MEN

Trade Schools Are Being Organized to Help Young Men Help Themselves to Better Living.

Training the hand to obey the mind, fitting young men to help do the world's work in industrial lines where skilled workmen are required, is doubtless receiving more attention than any other phase of the newer education in this country. Andrew Carnegie has with many millions endowed an institute for training young men in the trades, and schools of this character, both large and small, are being founded in many states. The whole effort is to the general end of providing more skilled workmen among the masses of young men, to help them to higher earning power and a better level of living, and through this development their employers will have a larger and better output with which to meet the ever growing demand for their products. To insure his future, to place himself beyond the poverty which besets the day laborer is the incentive which induces the young man to enter one of these trade schools. To get better workmen and more of them, without having to do the training in his own shops, is the incentive which has prompted the employer to help establish these schools.

It is doubtful if any of these schools in the United States is exciting the attention of organizations and men most

Corner of Pressroom, Winona Technical Institute.

Interested in this sort of training, or is receiving encouragement from young men in the way of enrolled students, that is being bestowed upon one of these institutions in Indiana—Winona Technical Institute, at Indianapolis. It was not the first technical school founded in this country, it is true, but it is one of the pioneers, and is regarded as a "trail blazer" in this sort of education by embarking in it on a most extensive scale, in the magnitude of its equipment, in the number of students and graduates, in helping young men to help themselves, and in following out numerous lines of industrial training never before attempted. The Winona Institute has the only successful school for training iron moulders in the world, the only school of lithography in North America, and it has one of two schools for tile-setters in the United States. It will before many months have the only school in the world for the training of hotel stewards and chefs. If its other departments are not the newest, they are among the largest and most successful to be found in the United States.

Winona Technical Institute is to large degree a public enterprise, although it does not depend upon the state government for an appropriation. Neither is it an institution which pays profits to stockholders and individuals, nor fancy salaries to those in immediate charge. The means with which it began its career in 1904 came in the form of public subscriptions amounting to a total of $154,000, which went for the purchase of the splendid tract of ground and buildings now occupied, not far from the heart of Indianapolis. To equal degree, too, it is a national institution, for since its beginning gifts in the form of money, equipment and general support have poured in upon it from all over the United States. The institute is also international, for its student body has been made up of young men from all over the world, and every clime of North America and every state in the union have been represented by students in the workshops.

Profiting from experiences in the Civil War, the United States government in 1865 began the construction of arsenal, or storage, properties in different sections of the country. One of the most extensive was established at Indianapolis. The site was then on the eastern edge of the city, but now the city has grown entirely around it. A heavily wooded tract of seventy-six acres was chosen for the arsenal, and on it the government built five massive buildings, two large residences and two or three smaller structures, all of stone and brick, with slate roofs, and costing about $750,000. In 1903 the government began abandoning its arsenals, throwing the real estate on the market. The idea of converting the property at Indianapolis into a great trade school originated with the public spirited men who had promoted the religious assembly and schools at Winona lake. The suggestion was promptly taken up by the moving spirits and newspapers of Indianapolis. Appraisers were named to place a valuation on the arsenal grounds and buildings, and the low figure of $154,000 was

FREIGHT YARDS FOR INDIANA

Statement That Gibson Is to Be Used by New York Central.

Hammond, Ind., Aug. 3.—Freight transfer yards in Chicago for each of the railroads embraced in the New York Central system will be abandoned as such, and a clearing house for general freight transfer for the New York Central lines will be established across the Indiana state line at Gibson, a suburb of Hammond, according to a statement made public here.

This information was credited to C. W. Hotchkiss, president of the Indiana Harbor Belt railway and closely allied with the New York Central interests.

Officials of the New York Central were in Hammond and were said to have disposed of some of the preliminaries. Another party of Michigan Central and Big Four officers also were at the site of the new yards.

JEANIE LEAVES WITH SUPPLIES FOR PEARY

Natives at Etah Will Be Asked For News of Dr. Cook.

St. Johns, N. F., Aug. 3.—The expedition carrying relief supplies to Commander Robert E. Peary left St. Johns today.

The eighty-eight ton schooner, Jeanie is taking fifty tons of coal and the same amount of stores, which she will land at Etah, Greenland, to supplement the supplies on Peary's steamer Roosevelt.

If Commander Peary is not at Etah the Jeanie will leave as soon as she discharges her cargo, bringing messages if Peary left any.

Captain Samuel Bartlett of the Jeanie will ask the natives if they have heard of Dr. Frederick A. Cook who went north two years ago to look for the pole and who has been missing many months.

MILK SHORTAGE IN THE EAST

Lack of Rain Sends Up Price of the Lactical Fluid.

New York, Aug. 3.—Unless there is a good rain within a few days, milk prices in the east will attain a figure not reached in years. New York and New Jersey are affected.

Dealers are hoarding their daily supply as best they can to meet demands. If relief is not forthcoming soon the retail price of milk will probably be doubled. A can is now worth $3.
