A failing tiny nerve—no larger than the finest silken thread—takes from the heart its impulse, its power, its regularity. The stomach also has its hidden, or inside nerve. It was Dr. Shoop who first told us it was wrong to drug a weak or failing stomach, heart or kidneys. His prescription—Dr. Shoop's Restorative—is directed straight for the cause of these ailments—these weak and faltering inside nerves. This, no doubt, clearly explains why the Restorative has of late grown so rapidly in popularity. Druggists say that those who test the Restorative even for a few days soon become fully convinced of its wonderful merit. Anyway, don't drug the organ. Treating the cause of sickness is the only sensible and successful way. Sold by A. F. Long.

PINE GROVE.

(Too late for Saturday's issue) Gustav McCleary spent Saturday night with home folks.

Everybody from this vicinity attended the fourth at Rensselaer.

Victor Walker of Indiana Harbor spent Sunday with his brother James Walker.

Mrs. Chas. Walker and children called on Mrs. H. E. Gifford and family Sunday.

Mrs. Lizzie Cooper and daughter, Bertha spent Sunday with Wm. Cooper and family.

There was preaching at the Independence school house Saturday night by Rev. Kuonen of the Barkley M. E. church.

The party given at the home of Ed Walker Thursday evening in honor of their daughter, Mrs. Morton Wells, was well attended and all enjoyed a good time. Ice cream and cake was served.

Those that called on J. M. Torbet and family Sunday and ate ice cream were Mr. Mullenhour and family, Verna Shroyer, Gustav McCleary, Newton Jenkins, Vilas and Cleveland Price and Bessie Ropp.

A Wretched Mistake

to endure the itching, painful distress of Piles. There's no need to. Listen: "I suffered much from Piles," writes Will A. Marsh, of New Health Tea early and cured of Bucklin's Arnica Salve, and was soon cured." Burns, Boils, Ulcers, Fever Sores, Eczema, Cuts, Chapped Hands, Chills, blains, vanish before it. 25c at A. F. Long's.

MT. AYR.

(From the Pilot.)

Mrs. Geo. Johnson and son Albert were Rensselaer visitors Thursday.

Mr. Keine, on the Hart farm, has bought an engine to pump the water.

J. M. Witham spent Sunday and Monday with his children at Monticello.

James Elijah, one of our ever alert farmers, contemplates breaking up in the neighborhood of 80 acres of his land this fall and sowing it to rye.

Gus Benson and family spent Monday with Ole Bengston and family. Rev. Noland went down to Mr. Bengston's with his camera and took their pictures.

Mrs. David Guthrie and children with their household goods left this week for Vincennes, where they will reside. Mr. Guthrie works there on a dredge boat.

Some of our people arranged with a driver at Rensselaer to come across and take them to Kankakee Monday in his auto, but he failed to materialize and they remained at home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Stucker entertained Mr. A. B. Rich and wife and Mrs. Berger of Chicago, and Miss May Rich of Minneapolis during the week. They are cousins of Mrs. Stucker.

A. B. Miller and wife of Chicago came Saturday for a visit with Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Miller. Mr. Miller is connected with the car construction department of the Armour Co. and returned Tuesday, but Mrs. Miller will remain for a few days.

Where Trouble Begins.

Most people ignore constipation at first. When they are lashed by indigestion's pangs, yellow jaundice, virulent liver trouble, they desperately wish they had taken Dr. King's New Health Tea early and cured themselves. For Liver, Stomach and Kidneys, it's supreme. 25c at A. F. Long's.

PLEASANT RIDGE.

The sick are improving at last accounts.

Grandfather Gwin is visiting in these parts.

John Martin entertained friends in Rensselaer Sunday.

RAINS HELP NO. DAKOTA.

And Crop Prospects Are Better Than a Week Ago.

Bismarck, N. D., July 11.—Reports received by Commissioner of Agriculture and Labor Gilbreath from 46 counties this week indicate a slightly improved condition in some localities owing to rainfall and cooler weather.

Drought, however, continues in other places, and it is now generally conceded that early sown wheat, oats and barley are in almost all instances beyond help. Later sown grain and that sown on fallowed ground, or new breaking, has benefited by local showers and promises a better yield than in a week ago. Hay and pasturage have also improved in the past week, but the former will be a very short crop, and the question of fodder for livestock is yet a very serious one.

Flax and corn are now the main reliance of the farmer, many fields of the former showing good promise, while corn is showing a wonderful growth considering the lack of moisture which has been the prevailing condition up to the present time. Good reports are received from Richland county and around Beach, in the western part of the state, where it is expected that the net results to the farmer will be as great as a year ago.

THE NATIONAL MONTHLY

A High Class Democratic Publication for 50c. a Year.

If taken in connection with The Democrat, only $2 for both papers a full year. The Democrat has made arrangements with the publishers of the National Monthly for the exclusive clubbing privilege in Jasper county, and can offer this high-class democratic publication to its readers for only 50 cents where taken in connection with this paper.

The National Monthly is unlike any other periodical of a like nature published. Each number contains a handsome cover printed in colors, and the cover design of each number for the past year has been the home of some former president of the United States. The periodical itself is printed in large clear type, on calendered paper, and is gotten up something after the style of the Ladies' Home Journal.

Sample copies may be had at The Democrat office. You will want the National Monthly after you have seen a copy of same.

"FOLEY KIDNEY PILLS HAVE CURED ME"

The above is a quotation from a letter written by H. M. Winkler, Evansville, Ind. "I contracted a severe case of kidney trouble. My back gave out and pained me. I seemed to have lost all strength and ambition; was bothered with dizzy spells, my head would swim and specks float before my eyes. I took Foley's Kidney Pills regularly and am now perfectly well and feel like a new man. Foley Kidney Pills have cured me."—A. F. Long.

A LOVE DRAMA.

The Characters Were a King and an Actress.

By EVELYN WITWOTH.

(Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.)

At Possenhoffen, on Lake Stannen, in the Bavarian Tyrol, stands a chateau in which lived Sophia, daughter of the Duchess Ludovic. Possenhoffen is also memorable as the birthplace of the late Elizabeth, wife of Franz Joseph, emperor of Austria. It is there that the emperor when a young man, having gone to propose for the hand of Elizabeth's older sister, saw a girl in short dresses running about the grounds, fell in love with her and asked her hand instead. The change was reluctantly granted by the father of the two girls, and Franz Joseph took Elizabeth back to Vienna. From that marriage sprang Rodolph, crown prince of Austria. It was he and the Baroness Vetsera who gave the world probably the most tragic love affair that has ever involved an heir to a throne.

There is another story of a royal lover whose ladylove lived on Lake Stannen. This was King Louis of Bavaria. His affair did not end in a tragedy, but came near being one.

Louis, who in his youth was especially handsome, was of a peculiarly fiery disposition. He was betrothed to the Princess Sophia, and the match, acceptable as it was for reasons of state, was, in addition, a lovers' mating. The royal pair were often together at Possenhoffen, frequently sailing over the bosom of the lake in view of the snowy peaks of the Tyrolean Alps.

While in Munich the king met a very beautiful actress. This woman, whom we shall call Gretchen, was captivated by the handsome young king, falling desperately in love with him. She knew that he had recently been betrothed to Sophia and that his heart went with his hand. Gretchen formed a plan to withdraw the monarch's love from the princess and win it for herself. To carry out this plan it was necessary for her to leave the stage. This she did and retired to private life.

Her next move in order to be brought in contact with the king was to enter the service of the princess. Gretchen's career on the stage had given her an acquaintance with a number of prominent persons, and to these she applied for their influence to secure the position she desired—that of reader. The duties of reader are, as the name indicates, to read aloud for the amusement or instruction of the employer. Gretchen was appointed to the place she coveted and in this way met Louis on occasions when he visited his betrothed.

But neither the beauty nor the wiles of the actress could draw the king from his allegiance. A breach must be made between the two before Gretchen could hope to effect an entrance to his heart. The many presents the king had given the princess were not kept so securely but that the reader had access to them. One day when an opportunity occurred she took from these gifts a half hoop of turquoises shaped like forgetmenots, intending to make an especial use of it.

There was among the officers of the king's bodyguard one whom we shall call Carl. He had been struck by the beauty of the princess' reader, and she for a purpose had entered into a mild flirtation with him. She gave him the turquoise half hoop as a mark of her favor, asking him to wear it for her sake. The young man, proud of his supposed conquest, was not slow to exhibit the proof of it before his royal master, and Louis was shocked at seeing in possession of another a gift he had given his betrothed.

It is only in real stories that people violate every doctrine of probability. One would suppose that any man in his senses, seeing his present in possession of another, would have made an investigation. Louis did not even ask the guardsman how he came by the trinket. Perhaps the doctrines of probability do not apply in cases of jealous lovers. At any rate, there are many instances to show that ordinary sense and common prudence do not. King Louis, furious at the apparent evidence that his beloved had been untrue to him, wrote her a scathing letter breaking off their engagement.

The letter fell like a bolt from heaven. It is a question whether disappointment, wounded love or indignation at the unpardonable treatment for which no explanation was given most affected the girl, who from having loved and received the love of a king was suddenly cast off. Such misunderstandings usually become more complicated and less explainable at every step. The second scene in the drama was even more deplorable than the first. The princess was astounded to learn that her reader had fled from her and taken up her abode within the limits of the royal park.

This begot another error. As the king believed that the princess had given the guardsman his present, so the princess believed that the reason the king had broken with her was that he might possess the actress. This led to a third complication. Sophia returned to the king all the presents he had sent her except the half hoop of turquoises, which she could not find and supposed had been lost.

The evening after the receipt of his gifts the king and the ex-actress-reader were out on the lake. The boat, shaped like a swan, was fitted up in royal style. The moon shone down upon them, its soft light intensifying the girl's beauty. That they might be alone the oarsmen had been left on shore, the king having himself pulled the boat out on to the lake.

But Louis' mind was on the princess, with whom he had been so wroth and who, instead of suing for forgiveness for the offense of which he had accused her, had broken the last link of the chain that had bound them together by returning his gifts. Moreover, he had noted that the half hoop which had made all the trouble was not among the gifts he had received. He spoke of this to his companion.

Gretchen came to a sudden resolution.

What influences people is not always known even to themselves, much less to others. It seems singular that the woman who had brought about this rupture of a fiery king with the girl he loved should while he was still hot have determined on a confession. But it must be remembered that she had gained whatever sway she held over her royal lover by the senses. Doubtless she could not endure her secret forever, and if she was to confess and throw herself on his mercy how could she hope for a more advantageous situation than this moonlit scene? If she was to succeed in winning a pardon no better time or place could be hoped for.

Throwing herself at Louis' feet, she told the story of her crime.

Not only were her hopes of forgiveness dashed, but death stared her in the face. That fiery nature which the king had already often displayed and which doubtless presaged the insanity which fell upon him later flashed out as from a demon. Seizing the kneeling girl by the waist, he raised her above the gunwale of the boat and threw her into the water. Then, taking up the oars, regardless of her cries, he pulled furiously to the shore.

Fortunately for Louis, he was not doomed to live under the stigma of murder. Some gamekeepers heard the cries of the drowning girl and, jumping into a boat, pulled out in time to save her. As soon as she had reached the shore she fled from Bavaria.

The king hurried to Possenhoffen, burning to undo the wrong he had done his betrothed. It was to be expected that he would have some difficulty in winning her forgiveness. But was not her lover a king?

Reaching the chateau, he sent word that he begged to see her in order that he might explain and ask forgiveness for his treatment of her. Word came back to him that she would not see him; that she would never be the wife of a man who had turned her away without a hearing and insulted her by supplanting her with the woman who had perpetrated the deception.

There are few cases where a king has been sent about his business by a woman who has really loved him, and it is not likely in such affairs that the indignant fiancée had long refused to be conciliated, but Sophia maintained the position she had assumed and never became the wife of Louis, king of Bavaria.

And yet this episode which separated a pair of royal lovers turned out a blessing in disguise for the Princess Sophia. Louis' outbursts of temper were but the precursors of insanity. Later his mind gave way, and another took charge of the government of his kingdom, while the legitimate sovereign was confined under the care of a physician.

The king was not violent and was permitted to take walks with his attendant doctor. One evening while they were out together near the lake which Louis had loved so well and which had been the scene of past episodes in his life he made some excuse to leave his guardian for a few moments. He seemed in such good mental condition that consent was given. Presently the doctor heard a splash. Hurrying to the lake, he saw his charge in the water. Jumping in, he seized the king, but the latter was too strong for him and, getting him under water, held him there till life became extinct. Afterward the dead bodies of the king and the physician were found in the lake.

Another tragedy involving the death of one born at Possenhoffen was the assassination of the Empress Elizabeth of Austria at Geneva by an anarchist. Indeed, the place and the period were full of remarkable happenings to the royal houses of Austria and Bavaria.
