WEDDING

THE SEEING TELEPHONE.

What May Happen When Fowler's Invention Is In Daily Use.

You have probably heard the story of the absentminded man at the telephone answering the inquiry of the friend who had forgotten his umbrella. "Is this it?" he shouted, holding the rain defier to the mouthpiece of the phone. This absentminded man was a prophet as well as an unconscious humorist, for it won't be long, they say, before he can see umbrellas and all sorts of things over the wire. The device which is expected to accomplish this miracle is called the televue. It was invented by J. B. Fowler of Portland, Ore., and has already been tested with success over a distance of 6,000 feet. Preliminary patents have been issued in Washington.
