DIED.

Victoria Freida, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Hopf, born December 31, 1890 died at her home near Ireland, Thursday Nov. 5, 1908, age 17 years, 10 months, 4 days.

She was a faithful member of the St. Scholastica's Society and for a number of years was one of the best members of the St. Mary's Choir at Ireland. She leaves her parents, two sisters and a number of friends to mourn her loss.

The funeral services took place in the St. Mary's church Saturday morning November 7th, at 8 o'clock a. m. Her early remains were laid down to rest in the St. Mary's cemetery which was attended by a host of friends and relatives.

The bereaved parents have the sympathy of all. R. I. P.

A precious one from them has gone, A voice they loved is stilled; A place is vacant in their home, Which never can be filled.

All is dark within their dwellings, Lonely are their hearts today, For the one they loved so dearly, Has forever passed away.

God in His wisdom has realized, The boon his love has given, And though the body slumbers here, The soul is safe in Heaven.

How to Cure a Cold

Be as careful as you can you will occasionally take cold, and when you do, get a medicine of known reliability, one that has an established reputation and that is certain to effect a quick cure. Such a medicine is Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It has gained a world wide reputation on its remarkable cures of this most common ailment, and can always be depended upon. It acts on nature's plan, relieves the lungs, aids expectoration, opens the secretions and aids nature in restoring the system to a healthy condition. During the many years in which it has been in general use we have yet to learn of a single case of cold or attack of the grip having resulted in pneumonia when this remedy was used, which shows conclusively that it is a certain preventative of that dangerous disease. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy contains no opium or other narcotic and may be given as confidently to a baby as to an adult. For sale by Jos. A. Mehringer.

DOG VARIATIONS.

Pointers and Setters Are of the Canine Aristocracy.

It is a mistake to suppose that dogs are anywhere near alike in character. Even those of the same breed vary, and about as much as men and women of the same nationality. As to the manners and the morals of dogs, they are to a great extent the result of their contact with man, and they develop along the same lines. And, on the other hand, it is impossible to make anything out of a mean spirited dog, just as it is out of a mean spirited person. Dog instinct is about the same as human instinct. A dog reasons, learns, judges by facts, exactly as a man reasons. He is quicker of observation. He has the keen sense of smell, which makes up to him in some measure for the vicarious experience of human beings. The dog must experience a thing to know it, and his faculties have been trained by generations of observation, of taking note, until they have reached their present perfection.

A dog has not the power of speech with which to conceal his thoughts. Consequently he is franker than man, but quite unconscious of it. When he is a dependent, he has the faults of one. He is vain, jealous, suspicious and a snob.

Pointers and setters are essentially of the aristocracy of the dog world, and they have gentlemanly qualities. They have the grand air. They will allow themselves to be admired by ordinary people, but they never give their allegiance to any except the accomplished hunter. They are elegant of form and vigorous of muscle, like any athlete, and have a power of discrimination and thought.

The well bred contempt of a fine dog of one of these breeds for a man who has not intelligence enough to understand his strategy in the field must be seen to be appreciated. There is a story told of a trained pointer that was taken out with a party of inexperienced hunters. She was seen to spring to the top of a wall and then fall back. It was supposed she had caught her foot, and they ran to release her. She was holding by her paws and was beaten down as a stupid dog and turned and walked deliberately home. It was finally found that she had scented a covey of birds on the other side of the wall and, fearful of flushing them before the hunters came up, had fallen back out of sight.

You can note the dignity and moral worth of some dogs in their carriage, the poise of their heads and the expression of their eyes. A dog of sterling character never steals any more than a human being of this kind steals. — Amateur Sportsman.

"Profound Emotional Sense." Hold out your hands to feel the luxury of the sunbeams. Press the soft blossoms against your cheek and finger their graces of form, their delicate mutability of shape, their pliancy and freshness. Expose your face to the aerial floods that sweep the heavens, "inhale great drafts of space," wonder, wonder at the wind's unwearied activity. Pile note on note the infinite music that flows increasingly to your soul from the tactual sonorities of a thousand branches and tumbling waters. How can the world be shrivelled when this most profound, emotional sense, touch, is faithful to its service? I am sure that if a fairy bade me choose between the sense of sight and that of touch I would not part with the warm, endearing contact of human hands or the wealth of form, the nobility and fullness that press into my palms.—Helen Keller's "Sense and Sensibility" in Century Magazine.

A Dilemma's Horns.

The young lady sighed deeply and was almost affected to tears. "Harold," she said, "declares that if I don't marry him he will end his life, and I am afraid he will." She stifled a sob, then continued: "And Randolph declares that if I don't marry him he will go into politics and become great and famous, and then he says I shall see what I have missed, and I am afraid he will keep his word too."

Overcome by emotion, she buried her face in her hands, not knowing whether to save a life or to spare the country another politician.

The First Census.

The first census originated among the Romans, when a group of the chief functions performed by the high officer called censor received the name of census. It was taken every five years and indicated not only the number of the respective classes of the people, but their domestic positions as husbands, wives, fathers, mothers, sons and daughters. The first modern nation to take up the census was the United States of America in 1790. The first British census was in 1801, but this did not include Ireland.
