CLUB WOMEN WERE INTERESTED.

A large number of the club women of the city were interested in the convention of the Federation of Clubs. The local committee that made all the arrangements for the Claypool hotel and all the entertainments was highly complimented by the visitors. Everything moved smoothly and there seemed to be no no jarring note of any kind. On the invitation of the president of the federation, the Indiana Ceramic association held its exhibit at the same hotel during the days of the convention, instead of waiting until mid-November, its usual time. This brought the Ceramic members in touch with the visitors interested in the art department of the federation. Combined with the serious business of convention work there were three social affairs, the reception, Tuesday afternoon, held at the home of Mrs. Edward F. Hodges; the reception, Wednesday evening, at the John Herron Art Institute, and the informal tea, Friday afternoon, which Mrs. Ovid B. Jameson arranged for her guest, Mrs. John Dickinson Sherman, of Chicago, who brought the greetings from the General Federation. The women attending the convention were leading members of the clubs they represented.

Mrs. W. S. Major, who is the newly-elected president of the federation, is a familiar figure among the club women, as she has been connected with the club movement and has been an officer in the club organization for years. Mrs. Major is one of the best-dressed women in the federation, and her beautiful costumes have been the admiration of every woman who loves pretty and artistic clothes. One club woman confidently said to another: "I have made a drawing of Mrs. Major's gown; the trimming is too pretty for anything." Mrs. Kinney, too, wore good-looking clothes, and some of the members who did not even rise to offer motions or make themselves prominent in any way, were notable also for their costumes. The convention was somewhat of a hot show, too, but the hats were so big they had to be removed and so they were not so conspicuous. There must have been at least 500 plumes on the hats in the convention hall—Indianapolis News.
