Schools Get Interesting Gift.

J. Roy Morrison was the recipient of a quantity of rice showing the various stages through which the product passed before it is ready to become the chief food, as it is for one-half the people of the world.

The gift was received from E. Dabozal, Jr., of Rayne, La., one of the most wealthy rice men in that country, and an intimate friend of Mr. Morrison's.

Realizing that this would prove interesting as well as beneficial to many persons Mr. Morrison has given a large portion of it to the public school, where it will be placed on exhibition about next Thursday.

The rice plant when growing looks very much like wheat or any other cereal, but instead of having a compact "ear" bears a head composed of a number of fine branches or stalks, each of which bears out grains. These stalks are easily detached and are covered with a brown husk. After the husks have been removed, the white grains then set free are called rice. The Whiting public library was also remembered, being given two of these rice stalks, which will also be placed on exhibition early next week.

The rice cultivation in Louisiana is only of a recent date. Instead of having to reap the rice laboriously by hand, up-to-date reaping and binding machines drawn by mules are employed with an enormous reduction in cost. In 1904 this region and Texas produced 21,000,000 bushels of rice. Modern steam threshing machines are used and every detail of the industry carried out under as good conditions, so that rice can now be grown in Louisiana at a cost actually less than in China.

The rice growing is a very interesting study, and the exhibit will no doubt be attended by a large number of people.
