NEWS OF THE COUNTY SEAT

Harry Swartz the Winner.

The Crown Point Gun club met at its west side grounds yesterday afternoon, and although the weather was somewhat chilly the day was otherwise ideal for shooting and some good scores were made, about the best of the season. Harry Swartz was the winner of the weekly trophy, breaking 22 out of a possible 25 birds.

The following are some of the scores made: Horst, 22; Hoffman, 21; Poss, 19; Neunfeldt, 18; Stuhlmacher, 17; Wirtz, 16; Kelsner, 14; Johnson, 13; Naberzityl, 12; Sasse, 11; Thomas, 9.

Want Game Off Thanksgiving.

Efforts are being made to arrange a game with the Lowell football team for Thanksgiving day by the town team that defeated them last Sunday, and everything looks favorable at present for Crown Pointers to witness a good game. The local team only defeated Lowell by a score of 6 to 0, and another score like this either way ought to make an interesting game on turkey day.

Slate Is Cleared Off.

The wedding slate has been cleared up for the present and is now ready for more names to be written on it. Crown Point has quite a few couples that are about ready to take the leap, so don't be surprised to hear further reports along this line in the near future.

The Passion play moving pictures with the lecture given on the subject by Julius Griesel, drew a good audience both evenings, considering this is the fourth time the subject has been produced here. Manager Rudolph is arranging to get some top notchers in the moving picture line for his future shows and will endeavor to draw larger houses.

The social given at the Presbyterian church last evening was well attended and a good crowd enjoyed the musical and recitation program arranged for their entertainment.

Politics has quieted down to such an extent in Crown Point lately that if you ask any one the question as to who recently ran for president, they have to do a lot of tail head scratching and thinking before they can tell you. So much for today and tomorrow.

It is reported that Miss Dunlavy, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Dunlavy, is quite ill at her home and is under the care of a physician.

The Crown Point high school team was unable to get a game today, consequently they are watching the others play.

In Little Old New York

Some Stray Topics From The Metropolis Of The Nation

[Special to THE TIMES]

New York, Nov. 21.—This city has often been accused of being devoid of reverence for antiquity and antique things and of being filled with an insane craving for new things and modern improvements. Slander, base and groundless slander! It is true, New York has its elevated roads and subways, its tunnels and its skyscrapers, but on the other hand it has also its Brooklyn Rapid Transit, its ancient and venerable postoffice and its prehistoric horsecars. Is there any other city in the world, regardless of population and importance, that can boast of horsecars at this late day? Scarcely.

Why, even Boston, the venerable old Boston, where every stone awakens historical reminiscences, where the streets still follow the tortuous twists of the ancient cowpaths, even Boston has abolished its last horsecar line, regardless of their historical associations and antiquarian interest. The last twenty or more horsecars and the horses required for the service were sold and found a ready purchaser in the New York City Railway company, which will use the cars and horses on the several horsecar lines of which New York seems to be so proud.

Now, that prohibition is stirring up so much dust all over the country and acrimonious discussions are carried on in the papers concerning the merits and demerits of "teetotalism," the rather surprising discovery has been made that in Hudson county, New Jersey, there are several schools conducted in the back rooms of saloons. These schools are only overflow branches and were located where they are by the school board of the county. One does not have to be a prohibitionist to disapprove of such a location for a school attended by little children or big ones either. It is almost incredible that such a thing could be. Even if the members of the school board, who may be saloonkeepers or frequenters of saloons, did not see the impropriety of locating a school in a room behind a bar room, the parents should have decency enough to object to such an arrangement. Surely, not all of them could be saloonkeepers.

Appropos the present controversy in relation to the merits of prohibition, Dr. Hugo Muensterberg of Harvard, one of the leading psychotherapists in the country, has made a state the other day, which should make even the most rabid and fanatical advocate of prohibition stop in his mad career and think, that is if he is capable of it. He pointed out that to prohibit the sale of liquor means the partial suppression of one vice and opening the door to a far greater and more dangerous vice, that is, he said, showed that whatever prohibition prevails the habitual use, or rather abuse, of drugs, particularly morphine and cocaine is increasing at a terrific rate.

Poor Salome has had an awful tough time of it ever since she first made her appearance upon the stage. At first everything went well, until Salome reached New York. Then her troubles began. Anthony Comstock objected to the veil business and a few other features and some of the ministers condemned the play, because it treated a biblical subject with what they considered, insufficient reverence. Only by a compromise, which made it necessary to do violence to the remarkable work, was it made possible to bring out the "Vide-Strasus" opera. Now the Baptist and Methodist ministers of good old Philadelphia have taken up arms against Salome and the Holy Synod, meaning the head of the Greek Orthodox church in Russia, which seems to play the part of a guardian of public morals in that country, has prohibited the performance of the opera. The way of the transgressor is hard, indeed!

"When is a necklace not a necklace?" That is the problem which the general appraisers will have to solve in the case of the pearl necklace which Tiffany & Co. not long ago imported for Maurice Guggenheim. The pearls were not strung, but carefully matched in size. The object of the importers was quite plain. There is a duty of 60 per cent ad valorem on necklaces, while the duty on unstrung pearls is merely 10 per cent. The government had evidence that the pearls were originally assembled in the form of a necklace, but that for the purpose of evading the higher duty the pearls were unstrung and sent in loose form. Theoretically the Guggenheim necklace was not a necklace, but for all practical purposes it was. The question is, whether it should be considered a necklace under the law or not.

Wu Ting Fang, the Chinese ambassador, would be an unusually progressive man even among Americans, for a Chinese. He is simply in an address the other day he strongly advocated the adoption of an universal language for the purpose of facilitating the commercial intercourse between the nations of the world. He was considerate enough not to suggest the Chinese language for that purpose and won applause by suggesting English as the best language for universal use. Mr. Wu is a great joker and his suggestion may not have been intended as a compliment to the English language, although it was interpreted as such. But, joking aside, English would fill the bill probably better than any other language, being unburdened by any rules of orthography, pronunciation of grammar and embracing in its vocabulary the vocabularies of nearly all other languages in some corrupted or Anglicized form. That should be sufficient to qualify English as the "Universal Language."

Music and vivisection were brought into close relation the other day, when the New York Anti-Vivisection society gave a concert at the Waldorf-Astoria to raise funds for carrying on its propaganda. The concert was attended almost exclusively by women, and one of the society women present, who knows practically every other woman who attended the concert, afterwards stated that there were not more than half a dozen women in the audience who did not own one or more pet dogs or cats. No wonder, they are opposed to vivisection.

The members of the "Gumshoe Fraternity" have become quite bold in New York recently and have employed methods unsurpassed in sensational features by the most thrilling stunts of the villain in any modern melodrama, but if they have any professional pride they better bestir themselves and be doing something or their Philadelphia rivals will carry off the palm. To awaken the members of the family, one after the other, line them up and keep them covered with gunpowder while one of the members of the gang collects everything of value in the house in the most worthy manner, in a melodramatic effect, but it is like the work of the bloodiest tyro compared with the feat of the Philadelphia burglars who chloroformed one member of a family after the other and then moved a 500-pound safe filled with jewelry out of the house and hauled it away, without being caught.

One of the most amusing features of a recent meeting of the New York Mothers' club and one thoroughly characteristic of that misnamed organization was the resignation of one of the members who actually remembered that her children had more claim upon her time than the club. The other members were horrified that the woman could allow such a trifle as her children interfere with her duties as a club member. What force!
