MONEY MAKING FOR THE MIDDLE AGED WOMAN.

By Temple Bailey.

"There's no place in the business world for a middle-aged woman," said a widow of fifty, recently. "Young girls of today are educated along practical lines, but in my time we were taught domestic arts rather than those which would bring us financial returns, and now that I am left to earn my living I am absolutely at sea."

Her position is that of many others, who, thrown upon their own resources for the first time, must face the hard facts of unskilled labor.

While some notable exceptions may be cited, the average woman will merely waste time in her attempt to acquire professional or business experience at a mature age. Stenography, typewriting, music—all these suggest themselves as money earning outlets. As a matter of fact, however, the world demands such experiences that the untrained worker will have little chance when in competition with those who have youth, and consequent quick memories, and the ability for rapid performance.

The business of keeping boarders has been discussed in these columns, and, if carried on competently, is, perhaps, the logical outcome of a domestic life. Women who have kept their homes along lines which make it possible for them to make homes for other people. A boarding house may acquire a stamp of distinction if the woman who runs it knows how to keep up to social and business demands. She may acquire independence, and there will be none of the harrowing competition with younger minds which so often weighs on the woman who works in an office.

During the winter months in the southern cities and during the summer months in northern cities there is always a floating population which does not trouble itself with household goods. Such people live mostly in hotels, but there is a rapidly increasing number who prefer a well furnished apartment, where, for a short time, they may play at housekeeping.

The woman with good furniture will find it profitable to rent an apartment and sublet it to such tenants. Often a one hundred dollar advance on the original rent may be obtained. It should be understood however, that cheap furniture and cheap apartments are not wanted. The furniture must be good, substantial and up to date and the apartment should be selected in a good neighborhood.

One woman, who makes her living in this way, uses a certain amount of her profits each year to add to her stock. She buys new curtains, new rugs, replenishes the linen. When new tenants come in they find everything in order. Not a cracked dish or a ragged towel.

and is now able to attend social affairs again. Her many friends are glad to welcome her.

The men attempted to hold up a store at Lyons a village outside of Chicago but were frightened away. They all got in the machine and drove away at breakneck speed. A posse was formed and the men were captured some distance away. The bandits who were arrested are: Thomas Janda, 22 years old, 3220 West Twenty-third street; Frank Jankowski, 22 years old, 3229 South Hamlin avenue; Joseph Jankowski, a brother of Frank. The men will be brought here for identification.

Twenty-five new pay-as-you enter cars will be put into operation in South Chicago next week to take the place of the old style cars. These cars have made a hit all over the city and South Chicago is to be included in making it. Two of these cars are already in operation on the 93rd street Pullman run.

What is it?

Simply the main spring of your watch. Just a piece of tempered steel about twenty inches long, coiled in what is called a "barrel," between the upper and lower plates of the movement. And it is the most cantankerous bit of material known to mechanics. After put in place it may perform its important duties without a hitch for years, or it may fly into twenty pieces within an hour. Of course you will charge the breakage up to your jeweler, who is no more responsible than the man in the moon. Sudden electrical disturbances of the atmosphere, extreme change of temperature, a sharp and sudden shock, contact with a cold substance, will frequently shatter this sensitive strip of metal, and sometimes with none of these excuses it will fly to pieces just the same. When the main spring of YOUR watch breaks, take it to
