Odd Fellows Still Angry.
 Odd Fellows are on the lookout for more evidence to prove that they were discriminated against by the board of public works in condemning of sidewalks on East State street in preparation for the general three-foot extension. They claim that the walk west of their fraternity building was four inches off grade, sloping away instead of towards the curb and that the first walk to the east that was not ripped up had pools of water standing upon it Saturday after the rain.
 According to one of the trustees the Odd Fellows consider it a matter of inefficiency on the part of the board or at least a gross piece of carelessness towards the public. If the sidewalk is laid, it is said, if they had been notified properly and if all the poor walks had been condemned. "It is the principle involved that caused the rumormongers," said an Odd Fellow. "We believe the instance a sample of the board's work. If the board had been notified in front of a residence or even a store nothing would ever have been heard of it for the kick would carry no weight. But it happened that 500 voters were owners of this particular fifty feet, which made all the difference in the world."
