

WHY BATTERIES CAN'T LAST FOREVER

"Most people can't understand why a tire wears out, or why bearing points of a car works loose," says F. W. Denham, local Willard Service Station Dealer, "but they don't quite see why a battery should ever wear out."

"Of course the main trouble is that it's harder for anybody to imagine a chemical process than a mechanical one, and the battery is strictly chemical."

"There is not much inside of a battery. About all there is to it is a set of plates with insulators between each pair, and solution that covers both the plates and insulators. These plates are simply lattices of metallic lead filled with lead compounds. The insulators may either be wood or be of Threaded Rubber."

"Before a battery can be used at all it has to be charged. The electric current coming in, causes certain chemical changes. When you turn on your lights or step on the starter, changes start in the opposite direction and supply you with the current."

"Of course this constant changing back and forth will wear out a battery in time, just as contact with the road will wear out a tire. And even if the battery is in storage and is kept charged, some wear will go on, as the chemicals are all present and are never absolutely idle."

"The way to get the longest life out of your battery is to keep in mind the fact that its life depends to a greater extent on how well you treat it, and to remember to add water and make a hydrometer test at least once every two weeks."

GREENSBURG.—Private Benj. Knoll, just back from overseas, brought news of a visit with his eighty-eight-year-old grandfather, whom he found while on duty with the army of occupation in Germany. The meeting was a happy one.
