

FURS FOR MILADI FROM OVER THE BORDER

Reynard is in fair way to become a neck piece

fox farming is very profitable. Red fox is in great demand; black fox is worth $75 to $1,000 a skin, and silver foxes are worth $10,000 to $15,000 a pair. Foxes have one litter a year of from one to nine pups; three is a good average for a well managed farm. Mink is also raised, the largest farm being at Lac Chaud, Quebec. Raccoon is domesticated in several provinces, and skunk raising has been successfully attempted and on a large scale is very profitable. The skunks are readily tamed and can easily be handled without cutting the scent glands. At the recent fur sales in Vancouver muskrats brought $4; fisher, $9; red fox, $40; prime interior mink, $15; marten, $40, and weasel, $1.75.

For years London, St. Louis and New York have been the selling centers to which Canadian furs have travelled, and St. Louis has been the world's premier fur mart, but Canada has finally come to a realization of the money lost in this way, and in the future will market her own furs. It is expected that Montreal will become one of the most important fur markets of the world. The auction at Montreal will be conducted by a large company capitalized at $5,000,000 and will be largely co-operative in nature.

The growth of population in the Russian supply is now cut off and United States has killed or driven away most of the animals worth to supply furs for our better halves and for such of our lesser halves as can afford them after the ladies are supplied. The old-time trapper is practically extinct in this country. He has moved his habitat to Canada where the procuring of fur is still an important industry, but there, too, the fur bearing animals and the men who hunt them are driven ever northward before the advancing outposts of civilization.

The demand for fur is greater than ever before—Miladi must have her coats, her muffs, her neckpieces, cost bubbly or father what it may. The
