"Drink to Me Only With Thine Eyes"
From "THE FOREST"

By Ben Jonson

"RARE BEN JONSON," so called on his tomb in Westminster abbey, ranks next to Shakespeare in the history of the British drama. Little is known of his early life, but he was a man of great energy and power, and his plays and poems. He died Aug. 6, 1637, being about sixty-four years of age. His plays are no longer acted or read except by students, but some of his beautiful lyrics are still popular.

D RINK to me only with thine eyes, I sent thee late a rosy wreath, Not so much honoring thee, And I will pledge with mine; As giving it a hope that there Or leave a kiss but in the cup, It could not wither'd be; The three'rd part of thine soul dost rise But thou thereon didst only breathe And seal'd it back to me; Both ask a drink divine, Since when it grows, and smells, I But might I of Jove's nectar sup, I swear, Not of itself, but thee!

At the recent meeting of the state central committee the question of presidential preferences was not formally discussed by the members, but all expressed themselves as for Judge Parker of New York, and declared their districts would send delegates pledged for him. It seems to be the intention to present B. F. Shively of South Bend, former congressman, for vice-president.

A special dispatch from Washington under date of March 29 says: "Representative Robinson of Indiana made the statement on the floor of the house today that hundreds of letters have been received by both republican and democratic members from Grand Army posts protesting against the service pension order as issued by the president. The old soldiers demand that a straight-out service pension be given them by authority of congress. Mr. Robinson read one of those letters. It was from Stansbury Post No. 125, of this city. The Grand Army objection to the president's order is that it is not law and consequently can be revoked at any time. The old soldiers want their exact status fixed by congress and not placed at the whim of a secretary of the interior." President Roosevelt's right to establish service pensions by executive order has been already questioned on both sides of the house.

The result of the democratic primaries held all over New York last week makes it clear that Judge Parker has swept the state and will have an overwhelming majority in the state convention which meets on April 18. Tammany, which has never opposed Parker seriously and has contended most for an uninstructed delegation, has New York and Brooklyn, with the exception of two districts, carried for Parker in the latter city, and "Boss" Murphy has lost his fight in Buffalo, the only "up state" contest which he ventured to make. David B. Hill, who has led the Parker forces, is in control. If the Parker men desire they can send, under the unit rule, a delegation to St. Louis instructed for their candidate.

For several days the drift toward Parker all over the Empire state has been marked, and Tuesday's primaries settled the matter. The importance of that day's work lies in the fact that Democrats all over the country have been waiting for New York to act. Especially is this true in the south. If Washington dispatches are to be credited, and if southern congressmen reflect the opinions of their constituents New York's lead will be unquestionably followed by the states to which Democrats must look for the greater part of their vote in November and whose united strength in the convention can make or unmake a candidate.

It seems to be assumed that as goes New York so will go the south, so far, at least, as the convention is concerned. Such being the case, Judge Parker will enter the race with a far stronger and more compact following than any other candidate, active or receptive, can now obtain. The result in New York, while not decisive, has a significance deeper than attaches to any other recent political incident.

Walter Wellman has been giving a good deal of attention in the past week to Judge Parker and has reviewed his career and his life. Judge Parker will be 52 years of age May 14. He was born and reared upon a farm in Cortland county, New York. He spent the summer season by working on the farm and in the winter time he went to school, just as thousands of boys who live on the farm are doing now. Later on he attended Cortland Academy, supporting himself by working after school hours. He then taught school for four years, during all of which time he was a close student himself. With the money he saved he attended law school at Albany, graduating in 1872. While under 30 he was elected surrogate of Ulster county, and re-elected to the same office. The county usually went republican. In 1855 Hill was nominated for governor of New York and had difficulty in finding a man to take charge of his campaign. He finally went to Parker, who at first declined on the ground that he did not know anything about politics. But Hill persisted and Parker accepted. The Democrats carried the state and when a vacancy occurred on the supreme bench of the state Hill appointed Parker to fill it. In 1897, the year after Bryan lost the state by 268,000, Parker was nominated for chief justice of the Court of Appeals and was elected by 60,000 majority. Politically he has always been loyal to his party. In 1896 and again in 1900 he stood by the regular democratic ticket, supporting Bryan in both campaigns and contributing money to the campaign fund.

The Richmond Times-Dispatch points out that shade trees in cities are not merely ornamental and shade producing but that they contribute to health. It says:

Each shade tree of any considerable size exposes an enormous surface in its leaves and each leaf tends to turn away a part of the intense heat of the sun and so to reduce the temperature. It is even said that shade trees are capable of reducing the excessive heat in the most exposed avenues by 50 degrees, and of maintaining a fairly comfortable temperature in the hottest weather. All vegetation tends to protect the earth from the direct rays of the sun, absorbs poisonous gases which have been exhaled by man and beast, and gives out pure oxygen instead. In the cities it is of supreme importance that there should be an abundance of shade trees. * * * The trees are more ornamental. As we have shown, they serve a beneficent and hygienic purpose, and they should be well cared for.

The New York World expresses the opinion that "the country may assume from now on that New York has made up its mind" in favor of Parker. It thinks "Indiana also strongly favors the New York judge for the head of the ticket, and that her party leaders, regarding the greater issue as largely determined by New York's practical unanimity, are turning to the consideration of vice-presidential availabilities." The World regards Parker as presenting an antithesis to Roosevelt and argues:

There is strength in the antithesis. Against absolutism, usurpation and militarism, Judge Parker presents repose, character, ability—above all and pre-eminently, the judicial spirit. His strength will grow as the thought grows. The contrast that he presents will bear discussion. It appeals to citizenship. It opposes reason to impulse, law to lawlessness, balance to haste, judgment to emotion. And these are qualities which the people have never failed to appreciate.

We think it will be conceded all around that the democratic state committee did a very wise thing under existing circumstances in postponing the state convention until after the national convention has been held. The date fixed is July 20, and the St. Louis convention will be on July 6. The latter will settle the question of national issues, and thereafter there can be no complications or misunderstandings on that score. But as it has been customary to elect national delegates at the state convention, the time fixed for holding the latter made it necessary to set an earlier date for the selection of delegates to St. Louis, and May 12 was chosen. That will give all persons interested an abundance of time to make such preparations as may be deemed necessary. With the single question of choosing their representatives to the national convention before them, the state delegates will be free from the embarrassments and entanglements that sometimes arise when earnest contests are being waged for state offices. It is very certain that the Democrats of the state will approve the action of the state committee as being for the best interests of the party.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

The democratic city ticket nominated at Tuesday night's caucus should be elected. It is made up of good citizens, sterling Democrats and taxpayers. Mayor Green was re-nominated without opposition, a high compliment to that gentleman as it is well known that his policies in the past, have not met the approval of all the members of his party. The ticket is exceptionally strong and is well worthy of the support of the citizens of Ligonier and especially of the Democrats.

The Democrats have nominated their city ticket and it is a good one, one which every Democrat should vote without a scratch. The attendance at the convention was much larger than was expected after the promised contest for the mayoralty nomination was not to materialize. Nearly two hundred Democrats took part in the deliberations and all were satisfied at the outcome.

The convention was called to order at 7:30 o'clock by City Chairman Showalter, whereupon Charles Nelson was selected as secretary by motion of Nimmon Smith. Upon motion the temporary organization was then made permanent and Mr. Showalter presided throughout the convention. The several ward caucuses were held first, the convention taking a recess for that purpose.

The First ward caucus resulted in the nomination of Harlan Gibson and Abe Weimer for councilmen, Henry Goulder getting a substantial support, however.

The Second ward caucus, presided over by Mayor Green, nominated Jacob Sheets and L. A. Banta; Lon McNutt being a close third, receiving 29 votes.

The Third Ward caucus was soon over, Albert Weaver and Thomas Kelly being nominated by acclamation.

The convention upon being called to order ratified the action of the ward caucus and upon motion proceeded to the nomination of the city ticket.

The name of Fred H. Green was presented by F. P. Bothwell in a neat speech, and upon motion of J. E. McDonald, Mayor Green was nominated by acclamation. Considerable enthusiasm was shown by Mr. Green's friends at this action, and he was called upon for a speech. He responded by thanking the convention for the honor and promising a continuation of his past policy.

Two names were put before the convention for marshals, Andrew J. Heltzel and William Vondersmith. The ballot that followed resulted in the nomination of Vondersmith by a substantial majority. Mr. Heltzel making a motion to make the nomination unanimous.

Wright Smith was nominated for city clerk by acclamation as was Sol Henoch for treasurer, whereupon the convention adjourned.

The election of Colonel McDonald to the position of commander would be a graceful compliment to the veterans of Columbia City. It would be more than a mere compliment—an act of justice to one who has ever been faithful to his country, true to its flag, and always mindful of the interests of the gallant men who saved the republic in the hour of its peril.—South Bend Times.
