St. Augustine Boasts Many "Oldest" Houses

In the oldest town in the United States, St. Augustine, Fla., "oldest" houses are very numerous.

As the tourist stands in the middle of Treasury street and stretching his arms, almost touches the walls on both sides at once, he is readily convinced that the seven-foot thoroughfare is the narrowest street in the United States, but the city's own disension as to the oldest house leaves the visitor in doubt.

There is an "oldest" house in America on the quaint and antiquated St. Georges street, where men and beasts mingle on the highway and balconies droop low overhead. It has plaster walls and dormer windows and red shingles on its roof. It calls itself Old Curiosity Shop and carries a crest over its door.

On the bay front is another "oldest" house, post-card proclaimed. It is a two-story structure, with the plaster peeling off of its brick. It has a gallery above and outdoor stairs at the side. Still harder to find is an Elizabethan mansion on St. Francis street. It is half timber and half stone, with wide shingled hoods where it opens on the street. It was once a Spanish mission, erected by the monks of St. Francis who came to St. Augustine with Menendez. They used it for a chapel until 1590. It is now a museum of old furniture, antique china and glass.

Of course this is the oldest, the keeper insists. What matter? Each is interesting to visit, with a charm of its own, and all are ancient enough.

Retain Curiosity, and Keep Up With World

There is perhaps only about one childish quality that should stay with us all our years, and that is our curiosity. If we keep on asking questions and wondering about things life will keep on being interesting and fresh and stimulating and growing bigger and better every day. But if we allow the routine of things, or a too great sense of satisfaction, to wear down and destroy our curiosity the zest will largely go out of living, and with that the possibility of progress, and we will stand cumbered with our prejudices and all the hampering lumber of life.

And strange as it may seem, there will probably be many more questions to ask when one is eighty than there were when he was eight. Indeed, it is only when one has lived long and thought deeply that he begins to understand how to ask questions, and to see how big is the world that he does not know.—Family Herald.

H. D. Shoup formerly employed by the Straus Brothers Co., in this city was in Ligonier Monday evening calling on old friends.

Her husband managed to bring the car to a stop. It was found that Mrs. Snyder had been driving with the brakes set which caused the fire.

Rob Aged Man.

When two masked men broke into the home of Charles Baker 82 at Pierceton Sunday morning about 4 o'clock they attacked and slightly hurt him with a revolver and then searched the house for his hidden savings of $400 but were disappointed and made off with $15 they found in the elderly man's pocketbook.
