ted States.

EDITED BY H. NILES.

This work has been contemplated for several years, and considerable preparations are made for it. It is now in the press, and expected to be published in or before the month of April next.

It is exceedingly to be regretted that a collection like this was not made at about the time when our constitution was adopted; facts of the most interesting character were then fresh in the recollection and the richest materials for it abounded.

Many of the choicest productions of an epoch which must always be regarded as the most memorable of our history, are lost forever; and an account of its feelings, which might have warmed the heart of patriot posterity, are much dissipated by the hand of time, or lost in the cold death of the historian, whose business is to relate facts, instead of showing the ge-neous motives that caused them to happen.
Yet some of those who participated in the great work of emancipation, still live to enlighten the political body as with "living coals" from the "altar of '76," and all the good things of the "times that try men's souls," are not lost, though ineffective by their dispersion, and of little use by the few copies that remain of them.

The editor believes that the simplicity of the truth, as held forth by those who devised and executed the severance of our country from the sway of a despot, has been widely departed from; and no effort shall be wanting to encourage a spirit to seek after, and hold on to, the principles of the revolution, considering that an observance of them is essential to the preservation of the rights and liberties of the people of the United States; for vigilance is the condition on which freedom is granted to us—it is positively maintained, or readily admitted, by every American that the men of '76 are to be regarded as the standards of political virtue;—how important, then, is it that we should collect and preserve some account of them to refer to as landmarks—to serve as criteria to test public men and things in cases of doubt?

The materials, tho' the stock is pretty large, are not yet sufficient for the extensive work contemplated. The editor of the Register has, for several years, been a collector of scraps and rare things—several gentlemen have liberally contributed articles which they would not have parted with except on an occasion like this; and others have promised us liberty to overhaul their neglected stores of old papers; but much useful matter must be in the hands of those, with whom we have not yet communicated on the subject, and every patriot is invited to give his aid to this collection.

In the present gloomy state of the times, there is but little encouragement to do any new thing, requiring an expen-siture of money; but it appeared to the editor, that if he did not commence the work now, he would be compelled to abandon it altogether. The number printing is only 1500, of which more than 500 are engaged—and the number will be reduced unless the copies are spoken for very readily. Considering this secondary consideration in this matter, but the editor is resolved not to let money in printed paper remain on his hands, if he can avoid it.

It is expected that the sum will be about the usual price of the Weekly Register; not as attached to the work, but to match it for such of the subscribers thereof as please to possess it; that is, it will make a volume of between 4 and 500 pages of superroyal octavo, and be printed on a brevier type, for three dollars each copy—a price which, considering the quantity of matter to be given, will not be thought unreasonable. If what will be deemed revolutionary affairs, is sufficient quantity and of suitable quality, to fill the volume, cannot be had, the number of pages shall be made up of modern things, but of the old fashion.

Subscriptions are respectfully solicited.

The price of the volume may be paid at the time of subscribing, or when the work is finished—but those who pay in advance will have the preference if there should not be copies enough printed.— When the volume is completed, the publication will be generally announced in the newspapers, and it will be delivered in sheets, folded and collated, ready to put into the hands of the binder. This plan is preferred, that it may be remitted by mail or otherwise, as directed; but no copies will be forwarded unless previously paid for, nor will they be offered for sale in the market, or lumber the bookseller's shelves. No more will be printed than there is a moral certainty of disposing of immediately. But to accommodate all who wish to possess this work, the editor is willing to pay postage or remittance to him, provided the amount enclosed is in the notes of specie paying banks, and for not less than two copies of the work.

— Gentlemen zealous for the "Principles of the Revolution," and of opinion that the proposed collection may have a tendency to bring them more into fashion, are respectfully requested to obtain subscribers for this work, and to correspond with the editor as occasion may require.
