SATURDAY, JULY 14, 1827.
A Society auxiliary to the "American Colonization Society," has recently been formed in Belmont county, Ohio. May the good work prosper!

Michigan.—The Monroe Michigan Sentinel mentions an export from that place for the New York market, of 200 barrels of flour, manufactured there. It is said to be the first flour ever exported from Michigan. The prospects of that Territory are bright.

Ohio Canal.—It was expected that the first boat would arrive at Cleveland from Akron, on the Ohio Canal, on the 4th of this month. The distance is 38 miles. This fact speaks much in praise of the activity and zeal with which this work has been prosecuted. It was only two years ago that day, since the work was commenced.—Eleven miles are completed on the Looking summit.

Earthquake. A considerable shock of earthquake was felt at New Albany, Ind. on the morning of the 5th instant—and at Centerville a slight vibration was felt at the same time. The same shock was felt at the same time, at Cincinnati, at Augusta, Ky. and at Brookville. These are the only places we have heard from. We have not learned that any one noticed it in this place.

We have seldom heard a tale of humble industry more instructive than that we are about to relate. We heard the substance of it related by a friend, and have taken liberty to throw it into the present shape, and lay it before our readers. It is a fine illustration of what Franklin so much insisted on, that Industry and Temperance are almost certain to lead to independence and comfort.

Thomas P.—at the age of 18, was by the death of his master turned loose upon the world, to gain a livelihood as a shoemaker. He shouldered his kit and went from house to house making the farmer's leather, or mending his children's shoes. Although a good old man, pleased with Tom's industrious and steady habits, offered him a small building as a shop. Here Tom applied himself to work with perseverance and untiring ardor. Harder than the sun he was whistling over his work, and his hammer and song were often heard till the "noon of night." He thus gained a good reputation, and some of the world's goods. He soon married an amiable and virtuous female—one whose kind disposition added new joys to his existence, and whose busy neatness rendered pleasant and comfortable their little tenement. Thus time passed tranquilly on—they were blessed with smiling pledges of their affection, and in a few years Tom was the possessor of the neat little cottage and a piece of land. This they handsomely improved; and it was evidently the abode of plenty and felicity. But now Tom began to relax from his strict habits, and would occasionally walk down to a tavern in the neighborhood. This soon became a habit—and the habit imperceptibly grew upon him, until, to the grief of all who knew him, he became almost a constant loungeur about the tavern, and extremely dissipated. The inevitable consequence soon followed: he got into debt, and his creditors gradually snatched him of all he had. His poor wife used all her arts of persuasion to reform him, and she could not think of using him harshly, for she loved him even in his degradation, and he had always been kind to her. Many an earnest petition did she prefer to heaven for his reformation, and often did she endeavor to work upon his paternal feelings. He often promised to reform; and was at last induced to stay from the tavern three days together; and his solicitous companion began to cherish hopes of returning happiness. But he could endure it no longer—"Betty," says he, as he rose from his work, "give me that decanter." These words pierced her very heart—and seemed to sound the knell of all her cherished hopes; but she could not disobey him. He went to the tavern, and after some persuasion he induced the landlord to fill the decanter; he returned, and placed it in the window immediately before him, "for," said he, "I can face my enemy." With a resolution fixed upon overcoming his pernicious habit, he then went earnestly to work—always having the decanter before him; but he never touched it. Again he began to thrive—and in a few years he was once more the owner of his former delightful residence. His children grew up and are now respectable and industrious members of society. Old age came upon Tom; but he always kept the decanter in the window where he first put it; and often, when his head became silvered with age, would he refer to his decanter, and laugh heartily at its singular effects; and he never permitted it to be removed from that window while he lived, nor was it until he had been consigned to his "narrow home."

SEMINOLE INDIANS. The East Florida Herald states that a talk was held on the 24th May with the Seminole Indians, the object of which was to express the desire of the government, that they would remove from their present locations to the country beyond the Mississippi. At this talk says the Herald, Col. White urged in favor of their removal, many reasons founded upon the incongruous habits of the Indians, with those of the whites; and the comparative difference between the country offered them and that which they now occupy. The Indians, however, promptly refused to abandon their residence, and also to send a deputation to examine the lands proposed to them, which had been suggested by Colonel White. He exhorted them, in concluding the meeting, to remain within their boundaries, and threatened them with punishment, should they transgress.—Niles.

Blackstone Canal.—The Worcester (Mass.) Spy says, that the route of Blackstone Canal passes through a tract of country where there are perhaps more manufactories within a mile of the canal, than in any other of equal extent in the United States. Leaving Pawtucket a manufacturing village well known, passes Central Falls, where there are cotton manufactories; Valley Falls, where Kelly's manufactory; the Albion, the village of Mansfield, with 2; a little above is Woodstock Falls, where are already three cotton and two woollen manufactories, and preparations for others.—Near this place are two others; beyond is Slatersville, with 3; and at a miles distance 2 for cotton and scythe making. This is but a small part of the route; and the remainder of it passes near a proportionate number of manufactories.

THE SOUTHERN REPUBLICS. Our accounts from Mexico, Colombia, Peru &c. are far from being satisfactory. There is a great want of stability in all of them, and the principles of liberty seem yet to be but little understood; and the superstitious and ignorant multitude are made the prey of artful and wicked men in numerous and important instances. The jealousy of these, also, of one another, and a real want of good feeling between the several states, we apprehend will prevent any useful meeting of deputies in a general congress for the better promoting the common benefit; and it appears that, in general, the British have a much stronger hold on the affections of the people of those countries than we have, because of the greater apparent zeal with which they have espoused the cause of South American independence. It is in the nature of our government that we should proceed deliberately, if not sometimes coldly, in matters of this sort, and the opposition to the Panama mission has been perverted to our disadvantage. Our best wishes continue for the successful march of light and liberty in these interesting portions of the earth.—Niles.
