WHAT THEY BRING.

The Prices Paid for Female Slaves in Turkey.

The poisoning of four beautiful odalisques, or female slaves of the imperial harem of the Sultan of Turkey, prompted by the jealousy of the other women, brings to mind the fact that the slave trade is the chief source of recruits for the harem.

The trade is conducted almost exclusively by a tribe of Tcherkesses known as Tesseridols. Families generally work together. One brother, for example, stops at home and minds the shop while the other goes abroad and purchases and forwards the raw material of the commerce. Negotiations with purchasers are conducted through the intermediary of Arab brokers, who call regularly on their patrons to inquire if they are wanting anything in black camels or white girls and are remunerated by percentage on sales.

The price paid for a white girl under 15 years old is $4, while a maiden between 15 and 18, especially if she can read and write and strum a little on the lute, is worth $4,000. A female slave of exceptional beauty, young, white and a virgin—the style most in vogue—are blondes with black eyes—fetches from $5,000 to $7,500. For a very choice specimen, with a smattering of French and able to play a few airs on the piano, a rich amateur has been known to pay as much as $14,500. Black slaves, who are brought principally from Africa, are either sold direct by the importers to the proprietors of harems or to dealers, two of whom have extensive private mansions in Stambul. These two generally keep on hand 100 to 150 slaves each. There are also depots in Scutari and in several villages on the Bosphorus. A strong black slave sells for about $100; a black maiden, $75 to $90.

The California State Flower.

The State flower of California is the eschscholtzia or orange-colored California poppy, which has great beauty and individuality. It is exclusively a California flower and was so named after Dr. Eschscholtz, who made an exploration to this country in 1816. The flower is a smooth-stemmed annual, with deeply cut, pale-green leaves, four brilliant orange petals of satiny texture, numerous stamens of the same shade, and a colorless, acrid juice. The two sepals are united into a cap, like a canister, which is pushed upward and dropped off as the blossom expands.

There are several varieties, the orange and white being found in the valleys and foothills and the smaller and lighter-colored in the neighborhood of the sea-coast. One kind is spotted with white. It often attains the height of nearly two feet.

Resurrected After a Month's Burial.

Among the Yaqui Indians recently, according to a traveler, lived a young man who was accustomed to fall on his knees from which only her mother could rouse her. On one occasion her mother went to Monterey, leaving the girl alone before the daughter fell into a trance and efforts to rouse her failed. The girl lay for several days motionless and was at last pronounced dead and consigned to the grave. A month later the mother returned, and a young man had been found, pale and emaciated, in the body of the girl. The body had not changed in the least since being consigned to the grave, and when the cabaret words were repeated the girl started up, and, after partaking of a water, accompanied her mother home.

Number Is Scarce, and Nobody Cares.

Genuine amber is becoming scarce every year, and it will not be long before a real amber holder or pipe-smoker will be a rarity and a luxury. The amber is a fossil gum, which was produced in large quantities by trees having a resinous sap, which flowed down the trunks and gathered in masses in the roots. It is found in the ground in marshes and other places where forests flourished in former times, and is also secured by dredging. The Baltic and Black Seas and the German Ocean formerly produced it in considerable quantities, but their supplies are now nearly exhausted. There is a little satisfaction, however, in knowing that the imitation amber is just as good as the real.

For Men When 12 Years Old.

A damsel of twelve who disliked boys wrote an essay upon them, in which she said: "If I had my way half the boys in the world would be girls and the other half would be dolls."

THE FUNNY AUCTIONEER.

On One Occasion He Was Brought to See the Serious Side of a Joke.

"I was called on one day to sell by auction a lot of household furniture belonging to a man and his wife who had been married four or five years," said an auctioneer in a recent cent mood. "All I knew about it was that a death somewhere necessitated their removal from my town, and, as they had no money, they were compelled to sell their effects to get enough to move on. Well, I was having a picnic in my young and foolish way, saying and bantering and making brilliant and witty side remarks on the articles as they came under the hammer. After I had disposed of a lot of stuff a cradle was put up. There were several young men of my acquaintance in the crowd, and I smiled at them as I turned the cradle round and began to rock it, humming a lullaby as I did so. 'Emmy is the cradle, baby's gone,' I said, and was going on to say something else to get a laugh, when I happened to look down into the face of a woman close to the platform I was standing on. She was dressed in faded black, her hands given her by some woman arguer than she was, and there was a look in her eyes that made me stop.

"She didn't speak, but as I stopped she looked up at me with the tears starting, and lifting her hands in a mute appeal of remembrance no word could describe, she gave a great sob of agony and turned away.

"I—I didn't know," was all I could stammer in apology. And I didn't know that it was her baby's cradle I was selling, and because the cradle was empty her heart was broken and she could no longer live in the house that the baby had left.

To Be a Boy Again.

I'd like to be a boy again without a woe or care, with freckles scattered on my face and hayseed in my hair; I'd like to rise at 4 o'clock and do a hundred chores, and saw the wood and feed the hogs and lock the stable doors; and herd the hens and watch the bees and take the mules to drink, and teach the turkeys how to swim so that they won't sink; and milk about a hundred cows and bring in wood to burn, and stand out in the sun all day and churn, and churn, and churn; and wear my brother's cast-off clothes and walk four miles to school, and get a licking every day for breaking some old rule; and then go home again at night and do the chores once more, and milk the cows and feed the hogs and carry mules galore; and then crawl wearily upstairs to seek my little bed, and hear dad say: "That worthless boy! He isn't worth his bread!" I'd like to be a boy again; a boy has so much fun; his life is just a round of mirth from rise to set of sun; I guess there's nothing pleasanter than closing stable doors and herding hens, and chasing bees and doing evening chores.—Washington News.

SHORT AND SERIOUS.

PEOPLE devote too much time looking at the clock.

A MAN'S temper is like a fly: it is full grown the moment it appears.

THE more you admire a thing, the more trouble it will make you.

IT is not the pleasure seeker who finds pleasure, but the one who toils for it.

THE best revenge to take on your enemy is to try to amount to something yourself.

SOME men will make fools of themselves when they know it as well as anybody.

A MAN never wants anything so bad as when he is told he will have to fight for it to get it.

TOO MANY people think their friends will admire them whether they have on clean collars or not.

TO-MORROW should never come: all that it does is to prove to a man that he was a fool yesterday.

THERE is comfort in the reflection that some men are honest as naturally as others are dead beats.

NO MAN can be everything his neighbor thinks he ought to be, unless he is ashamed of himself all the time.

THOUGH there are billions of people in the world, every man's happiness depends on how two or three treat him.

NO WOMAN ever admires a man so much after he has made a confidante of her, and told her of his love for another woman.

AFTER a man has become rich in a town, people who dislike him begin to look mysterious when the question is asked how he made his money.

WE once knew a pious woman who was always confessing to the Lord that she was a great sinner, but she was never known to admit a mistake of any kind to any one else.—Athenian Globe.
