A SUDDEN IMPULSE.

It Causes a Philadelphia School-Teacher to End Her Life—For No Known Reason Miss Emma Garrett Throws Herself from a Fifth-Story Window in Chicago and Is Killed.

CHICAGO, July 19.—Miss Emma Garrett, principal of the home for deaf children at Philadelphia, entered the Briggs house about 6 o'clock Tuesday evening. With Miss Garrett were her sister, Mary S. Garrett, also a teacher, and Miss Viola Wilcox. After having registered the ladies were shown to room 500 on the fifth floor and on the east side of the hotel fronting the court. This court is of heavy glass set in iron framework and extends from above the second floor. Its dimensions are about 30 by 30 feet. All seemed in the best of spirits.

While Night Clerk Henritze was working at his desk he was startled by hearing a heavy crash on the glass cover over his head. The shock excited guests who happened to be in the corridor and the clerk darted upstairs to investigate. Screams came from room 500. Henritze burst open the door and found Mary Garrett and Miss Wilcox hysterically shrieking: "Oh, she has killed herself." The big window on the court side was open. The clerk looked out. Away below him lying on the shattered glass roof was the bleeding body of Emma Garrett. She had entered her room with her sister and friend seemingly in a quiet and happy condition of mind. The ladies set away their valises and removed their bonnets. Miss Mary was seated in a chair and said something about the educational congresses in session at the art palace. Miss Emma walked over to where her sister was and sat down beside her. She glanced up and saw the open window. Without a word she arose and walked to it. Her two companions noticed nothing peculiar, they say. As she reached the window she laid her hands upon the sill. In an instant her face was changed. The dark eyes seemed to stand out from their sockets. With a convulsive clutch upon the wooden casing and full in the gaze of the two horrified observers with almost lightning-like swiftness the crazed woman sprang through the window.

Those she had left behind were too frightened for a moment to stir from their seats. The woman had gone to her death headforemost. Her body had partially turned as she fell, for the side of the head, as well as the top, was crushed to an almost shapeless mass. From the way she had struck death must have come on the instant. The face was almost unrecognizable. Besides the broken skull the neck had been dislocated. Blood had flowed in streams from her ears and mouth, staining the black silk dress she wore and making the sight a ghastly one. There was nothing that could be done other than to remove the body to the morgue at 73 Fifth avenue. In the short space of half an hour the woman who had reached the hotel in apparently perfect composure and happiness lay mangled in the dead house.

When the sister and Miss Wilcox recovered sufficiently to speak they said that no reason could be given for Emma Garrett's terrible act. She had never been afflicted with anything like insanity nor did it exist in the family. The ladies had come to Chicago for the purpose of attending the educational congresses and visiting the world's fair. The hotel people seem to think that the sight of the open window might have given the woman, tired and excited by the long journey, the inexplicable impulse to throw herself out of it.

GREAT FIRE IN LONDON.

Conflagration in the Very Heart of the City—Thirty Buildings and Warehouses Destroyed with a Loss of £1,500,000.

LONDON, July 19.—Monday night's warehouse fire in the district bounded by Leadenhall streets and Bevis Marks and Cammille streets burned over an area of over 1,500 yards before the flames were extinguished. Thirty buildings were entirely destroyed. These buildings were occupied by more than twenty-five firms, who dealt in stationery, clothing, tea, wines, furniture, imported goods, etc. The porters and their families living on the premises had narrow escapes. Many of them rushed to the street in their night dresses. It is expected that the loss will reach £1,500,000. The burned district is but a short distance to the eastward of the Bank of England, the Royal exchange and the Mansion house, the residence of the lord mayor.

When Fort Sumter was fired on he resigned a district judgeship and mustered a company. He came out of the war as colonel of the Twenty-second Iowa infantry, was elected governor in 1863 and again in 1865. He afterwards served in the Iowa legislature, and was one of Greeley's followers in 1872. ### MANY BANKS COLLAPSE.

A Day of Excitement in Denver—Four More Banks, a Big Dry Goods House and Several Small Firms Fail—Five More Kansas Banks Closed.

DENVER, Col., July 19.—No such scene was ever witnessed in all the west as could be seen here Tuesday morning shortly after 10 o'clock, when the banks were supposed to open their doors for business. The failure of three savings banks Tuesday had excited the masses and the streets were crowded with anxious depositors. The eleven clearing-house banks, located within four blocks of each other, were surrounded, and far into the streets the crowd gathered until officers and special police were called out to clear the way for traffic.

The Union national, with a capital of $1,000,000, posted a notice that they would not open their doors. This started the panic, and, following quickly, the Commercial national posted a similar notice and then the National bank of commerce.

A run was immediately started on all of the other banks. The excitement continued unabated until about 3 o'clock, when it almost entirely subsided at all the banks, except the Utah state national and the German national, where the line of depositors seemed to increase instead of diminish.

The general opinion among the bankers and business men is that the panic is over and that no more banks will be obliged to close, although the run in a mild way may continue against two or three banks for a day or two. D. H. Moffatt, president of the First national, stated that the deposits at his house during the day greatly exceeded the withdrawals.

It is believed by financiers that Tuesday's run will result in the people having more confidence in the strong banks, that the money withdrawn will at once be redeposited and a better footing be established in financial circles, which will make money easier. The suspended banks expect to resume business in a short time. The constant drain on the banks by scared depositors brought about the crisis. It is stated by bankers that no less than $3,000,000 has been drawn from the banks during the last three months. Of this $3,000,000 has gone to the east in regular lines of business, but there is $5,000,000 hoarded in the city. The safety-deposit vaults are full and there is reason to suppose that the homes of workmen contain secret places in which their savings are hidden. If one-fifth of that amount was let into circulation the stringency in Denver would cease.

The banks paid all demands except on time certificates, they demanding that these remain until the expiration of time. The clearing house will render no assistance, each institution being compelled to stand upon its own foundation.

The Mercantile bank, a private institution, with a capital stock of $100,000, closed its doors at noon. The failure was caused by the failure of the Union national bank, through which it cleared.

The McNamara Dry Goods company, one of the largest institutions of the kind, failed Tuesday morning. The liabilities are placed at $200,000. The failure was brought on by an attachment served at 1 o'clock Tuesday morning by the Union national bank, which failed to open its doors, for $71,750, and the Colorado national for $20,847. The failure was not unexpected, but it had been hoped that money would be easier, and that the firm would be able to pull through. The stringency in the money market and inability to place securities or secure an extension from the banks, aided by the closing of three savings banks Monday, was the direct cause. Nearly the entire amount falls on Denver banks and commercial houses.

Following the failure of the big McNamara dry goods house several other mercantile failures were quickly announced. One was the John Mount Lumber company on an attachment from the German national bank for $155,200.

Albert Nelson's restaurant and saloon went down with the National bank of commerce. His assets are placed at $111,510, with liabilities of $66,725.

M. S. Noah, installment furniture house. Assets, $40,000; liabilities, $16,000. Three other firms with liabilities of $20,000 each were announced as having failed Tuesday afternoon. They were all caused by the bank panic.

TOPEKA, Kan., July 19.—State Bank Commissioner Breidenthal was notified Tuesday afternoon of the failure of the Citizens' bank of Kansas City, Kan.; the Citizens' bank of Armourdale, the Bank of Richmond, Franklin county, and the Farmers' and Merchants' bank of Osawatomie. All of the banks were doing a small business.

FORT SCOTT, Kan., July 19.—The First national bank of this city failed to open for business Tuesday morning, owing to steady withdrawal of deposits and inability to collect assets. The officers claim that the bank's assets are more than three times its liabilities and depositors will lose nothing.

A General Restorative. The above term more adequately describes the nature of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters than any other. The medicine has specific qualities, of course, as in cases of malarial disease, dyspepsia and liver complaint, but its invigorating and regulating qualities invest it with a health-endowing potency made manifest throughout the system. Purity and activity of the circulation are insured by it, and it effectually counteracts tendencies to kidney disease, rheumatism, neuralgia and gout.
