

COMMENCEMENT.

The Graduating Exercises of the Rensselaer High School.

The commencement exercises of the Rensselaer high school occurred last Thursday evening in Eger's opera house. The house was crowded with spectators who came out to hear the graduates. The stage was elegantly decorated with potted plants of the most beautiful character, which seemed in perfect harmony with the occasion. The program was opened by music from Healey's orchestra, which was highly complimented all the way through. This was followed with invocation by Rev. Dr. Utter. After another selection by the orchestra Orren F. Parker gave his ideas of "Compulsory Education," and we have not the time or space to give his oration either in full or part, but will say that many excellent suggestions were offered that would prove beneficial should they be enforced.

"Territorial Growth of the United States" was the subject chosen by M. L. Spitler, Jr., and we doubt if a better one could have been selected. He gave the growth of our nation from the time of the landing of the Pilgrims at old Plymouth Rock down to the present time. The subject of our own country is always an inspiring one to the true American, and the easy manner in which the oration was delivered by Mr. Spitler made it very interesting to the audience.

Ray D. Thompson talked upon the "Coming Nation" and impressed upon the ears of the audience what the future had in store for us. This is a broad subject, but showed much study and thought in its preparation. He presented the fact the manner in which this government was established makes it the greatest of any, and that there is a desire for federation among the different nations throughout the world. Petty quarrels and mortal combats among the nations were almost a thing of the past. Peace now reigns supreme. Arbitration is the manner of settling questions of national importance and not the sword and bayonet.

Benhart Fendig gave "Literature and the Age," and it was one of the most interesting orations of the evening. He has an easy delivery and every word he uttered was plain and distinct. The subject of literature is a grand one and the full understanding of it can only be obtained by the most careful study. To know literature one must study it. He gave numerous quotations from various authors and showed conclusively that he had not been idle during the preparation of his subject.

One of the greatest questions before the people of this nation is that of "Good Roads." Jesse M. Coen described at length the benefits resulting from good roads and gave many bright ideas during his oration. This great thing has been before the people of this country for several years and many a scheme has been devised by which the highways throughout our land might be bettered. Road congresses have been held that have brought together the ablest minds on this subject, and the time will come when we will have good roads from one end of the country to the other.

This oration was followed by a nicely rendered solo on the violin by Miss Mary E. Utter, with Miss True Alter presiding at the piano.

Miss Florence Neal read a most interesting paper on the life and works of that great philanthropist, George W. Childs. She reviewed the many kind and noble deeds of this large hearted man, who done so much to relieve those in distress. That there were more of his generous nature throughout the land, we know that it would be better. The use to which he placed his riches benefitted many and filled with gratitude the hearts of those whom he chose to help.

One of the most interesting things connected graduating exercises, is the class history. For the class of '94 this work was selected by Joseph H. Marshall, but we regret to say that his reading was inaudible to the audience and could not be heard at all. This was a sad feature, as all were eager to hear the class history.

After another beautiful selection by the orchestra, Prof. Bonhannon presented each of the graduates with their diplomas. Benediction was pronounced by Rev. B. F. Ferguson.
