

ACROSS THE DEEP.

Berliner Allerlei.

From our Special Correspondent.

BERLIN, May 17, 1894.

I desire this letter to assume the dignified role of "scraps." I have a few observations to record, which would scarcely consent to be incorporated in one connected letter.

In the first place one reads in an American paper concerning that ever fruitful subject the "Tariff question and the McKinley and Wilson Bills" and we wonder over here if the question possesses any elements of solution, and since one observes the different workings and effects of the tariff in the different countries, he sometimes, and I believe, very rightly, too, comes to the conclusion that protection and free trade do not agree with the "cures" that have been claimed, nor are they a specific for the monetary evil which is supposed to afflict the world. Justice, for example, the question of tariff and price. If we notice clothing, we find that in America a suit of the same cloth and workmanship will cost between twice and three times as much as in England, a free trade country, or in Germany, practically a protectionist country. One of the most noticeable instances is that of cigars. In America, where we have an internal revenue tax only, our cigars cost from 10 to 15 cents on for their cigars. In England and Scotland one of our party, who always kept us informed on this subject, found that a cigar of even poor quality cost 12 cents and higher, and in Germany where tobaccos are taxed very high cigars are remarkably cheap. Drawing on the experience of my friends, I find that what would correspond to our 5 cent cigar at home, sells here for 5 pfennig or one and a quarter cents, and as a result of this cheapness we find an enormous number of cigar shops throughout the cities. So we find a vast variation of prices in the different countries irrespective of what we might expect from the influence of tariff internal and external. Take meats as an illustration. The policy of Germany has been to exclude American meats from German markets by aid of tariffs, but yet, in spite of the tariff, American meats sell for less than German meats. This is due to the prejudice against our meats, because of our careless inspection laws of the past and still to a greater extent due to the methods of preparing the meat for the market. Our meats, especially swine, is much stronger in taste than the German. This is due to the fact that we feed chiefly corn which produces very strong and coarse meat in comparison to the meat found here. The German feeds more rye, and materials which produce a sweet flavor. So to judge correctly upon this great question one must be familiar with more than the per cent. levied upon a given article and the prevailing price or else the results derived will be of little value. I believe if the truth was fully told we would find the condition in every country due vastly more to customs than to any existing system of legislation. Our prices adjusted by the unsettled conditions of an ever changing economic status which has had, at least, the acquirement of rapid wealth as its goal. This strife has been too severe and to-day we are experiencing the result and with it must come a new economic adjustment. But as long as people are taught and made to believe that the economic welfare of our country depends upon a set policy of free trade or protection then it follows that more or less injury results in frequent legislation with a view to radical change of policy. But when we say that such legislation is responsible for this and that economic condition, good or bad, we are likely to lose sight of a thousand and one other causes as powerful as this and thus magnify this one ant hill out of proportion and even into a mountain. Our politics could better afford to be engaged in its own purification in our large cities rather than in the effort to give undue importance to an economical party creed.

One thing that impresses the stranger in his stay in Berlin is the ease with which the city street car lines transfer her population. There are more miles of street car lines in Berlin than in any other city of the world and so far as I have seen not an electric line. All are horse lines or propelled by steam. The suburban communications are most excellent and as a result, the city in the last few years has taken to suburban residences and we find a very strong population in all the towns around. The city is circled with a line known as "Ring-railway" which comes into the city a different point affording splendid opportunities to leave the city. To show the possibilities of the city to handle passenger traffic on May 14 and 15, two holidays, there were about 500,000 tickets sold to leave the city, and this does not take into consideration those who came here from a distance or those carried by the lines within the city limits or those who hold time tickets. But this enables some judgment to be formed as to the capacity of the lines to handle the population with efficiency.

To an American who has seen anything of country life in America, or who has ever within the country districts to any extent is impressed with the absence of our Indian corn in Northern Germany. In Southern Germany, I am told, it is cultivated to considerable extent. In Prussia we notice it very often as a decorative plant in yards and in botanical gardens. I noticed, last fall, a small patch now and then, of very small and puny stalks which were overtaken by the frost as is always the case in this latitude. Spring is much earlier here than in Indiana although as far north as Labrador, yet it does not get so warm and corn will not ripen here. Potatoes, rye, wheat and beets are the principal staples.

One of the strongest contrasts that an American notices between his country and Germany or most any European country is with reference to mislapses of all kinds. Take the matter of lynching. It has been practiced to an alarming extent at home. It is utterly impossible here in this land where a police system means something. The number of railroad accidents in America were, of course, due greatly to the number of persons carried by the roads last year. In France, England and Germany an accident is a very rare thing and railway travel is as safe as to walk. Their trains are not run at such a speed and their tracks are models of strength and completeness.

The German cannot understand the Coxey raid, or he cannot understand why it has been permitted to assume such large proportions without any apparent effort on the part of the state to break it up. He reasons from what would be the result of such a movement in Germany. The first ten men would have been dispersed with as much show of power as if they numbered 500. He also asks, what purpose has it? This is different to explain to him. And after this is done, he asks if that is our method of legislation, and I tell him that it is our right to petition. He also further asks, what kind of men compose the army, and I am compelled to answer to the best of my knowledge that they are mostly tramps and some honest workmen, meaning well but badly deluded. But, he asks, can't these men get work in the cities, and I tell him that the cities are now overrun with men without work. Then scarcely understanding what our country life means, he questions as to whether it is not possible for them to get work in the country, and I am compelled to answer that it is not only possible for every man to get employment in the country, but in some sections as Iowa the farmers are demanding laborers. Then with his accustomed method in summing up matters he says it is probable that they do not want work, and I am compelled to reply that it is very probable. I believe that is the truth of the matter. No person is more unwilling to condemn the claims of labor than myself, because I know what it means. But when we come to reflect as to how many men can, at present, get employment in Jasper county, not only insuring a good living, but also at fair wages, considering the price of agricultural products, we are forced to the conclusion that it is not work that the great majority of these men want, but the excitement of moving around as most of them have been accustomed to all their lives, and Coxey has gained the principal end he was after—notoriety.

Berlin is to have an exposition in 1896 designed especially for the merchants of Berlin. They are going through the long contested question as to place, etc. It was the intention of Germany to hold an international exhibit in 1898 in order to spite the French who have their planned for 1899 and have already 100 secretaries at work in its organization, but Germany is not as wealthy as France and cannot afford to risk much in such a rivalry.

In spite of all the mishaps, irregularities, strikes, lynchings, murders, train robberies, bank and business failures, fires, corruption in politics, Coxey armies, etc.; in spite of all these, we are the greatest nation on the face of the earth for the possibilities which we possess. Europe has a poor and weak basis upon which to draw her support while America is young—just beginning to develop the latent power within her grasp. Our evils are not so deep seated as those of this effete and in many ways rotten European society. As long as our country town and country itself exerts its influence upon our national civilization we will expect a vigor that is not capable of being attained here. To see Europe is to make one intensely American and teaches him to love America, the more for her weaknesses, because they are temporary and when remedied the democracy of the people will be indeed grand in its triumph and splendor.

Wedding Bells.

DIXON, Ill., July 1, 1894.
Of all June weddings none were more happy than that of Miss Zella Smith, of Rensselaer, and William Deeter, of Dixon, Ill., solemnized Wednesday evening, June 27. The ceremony was performed at the Grace Evangelical church, Dixon, Ill. The church was handsomely decorated. Just as the clock pointed to the hour of eight, the bride and groom, attended by Rev. Harry Deeter, of Dixon, and Lucinda Cox, of Rensselaer, took position under a floral arch and Rev. I. Diven, pastor of that church, uttered the words that united them forever. Many friends were present.

The bride was attired in a becoming costume of cream wool and wore carnations and white roses.

A reception was then tendered the newly married couple at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. Newton Deeter, only relatives and a few intimate friends being present. The bride was handsomely remembered in the way of presents, including silver, glass-ware, china and furniture, and in no little way attested the popularity of the young lady. She has won many friends wherever she is known, and all unite in hearty well wishes. Mr. Deeter is deserving of the fair bride he has won. He is well known in Dixon, where he has lived for a number of years. He is an industrious young man and bound to succeed.

Last June, Dick Crawford brought his twelve months old child, suffering from infantile diarrhoea, to me. It had been weened at four months old and being sickly everything ran through it like water through a sieve. I gave it the usual treatment in such cases but without benefit. The child kept growing thinner until it weighed but little more than when born, or perhaps ten pounds. I then started to giving Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. Before one bottle of 25 cent size had been used, a marked improvement was seen and its continued use cured the child. Its weakness and puny constitution disappeared and its father and myself believe the child's life was saved by this Remedy. J. T. MARLOW, M. D., Tamaroa, Ill. For sale by F. B. Meyer Druggist.

Vote It Down.

A little over one hundred and thirty years ago after the thirteen original colonies had been settled, while the country was taking root and the lads who were to show the mother-country her inferiority by throwing off her old despotic yoke and assuming the responsibility of self government, were growing into stalwart manhood. A witty Frenchman compared the people of England to a barrel of their own beer froth at the top, dregs at the bottom but clear and sound in the middle.

Happily, it was by the middle class that America was settled and this left England little else than froth and dregs and these it still continues to be.

Slowly for a long time but now rapidly, things in America are assuming the same aspect and unless checked in their course, in time our condition will be as deplorable as that of England. Now is the time to check them, not by dispensing with the froth as it seems some are in favor of doing, but by simply voting it down and bringing some of the sound clear middle to the top. Certainly this can not be done by voting with either of the old parties which have long been in power and now have nothing in them but froth and dregs. H. P. F.
