A Communication.
TEFFT, Ind., Nov. 1894.

ED. PILOT—In the last issue of your paper I notice a request for correspondents in different localities, and seeing none from this point, I concluded to become an occasional one at least.

We have had a very nice fall, good weather up to the election and since then, we have had very disagreeable and squally weather. Whether this was caused by the republican triumph or not I do not know, but there is as much reason to charge it to the republicans, as the panic and hard times of the last two years is chargeable to the democrats.

The republicans in my opinion are not to blame for the weather since the election nor do I believe the democrats are responsible for hard times or the panic. Our republican friends would have us believe that remodeling of the tariff by the democrats caused all the trouble, and the Cleveland democrats agree with them on that point.

Now I am not a democrat of the Cleveland stripe nor have I any faith in the republicans. I am an old time democrat, one that believes in the doctrines of Jefferson, Jackson, Polk and Buchanan. I have no faith that the promised revival of business and trade made by the republican speaker during the campaign, will be forthcoming. We can't have any revival under the present financial policy. We must return to the free coinage of silver or the issuing of more government treasury promises. This crisis in our finance was brought about by the national banks and their co-workers, the millionaires. They commenced this trouble when they attacked the Sherman Law, and after succeeding in repealing it, under the promise to do something for silver. They have gone back on this promise and not only refuse to coin what silver they have bought under that law, but clandestinely work for the driving out of use what silver we have now coined. Not only do they do this, but they are striving to compel the government to take up the green-backs with gold bonds and stop their use as money. If they succeed in driving silver and green-backs out of circulation they can replace the amount $800,000,000 in their promise to pay and scoop in the interest on the bonds thus issued, and get interest on their bank notes to an equal amount. I am ready to join hands with any party that will help to defeat it. The democrats have got the chance to defeat this policy and I trust they will do it, but seeing that they failed to redeem their pledges and are blindly following Cleveland, I have but little faith they will do it. The present old congress on meeting in December should pass a free coinage act the first thing they do, and business then would revive at once, but the banks and the millionaires will be on the lookout and will pour out money like water to prevent it. If they succeed, our only hope is in the people to rise up and drive both old parties out and put in men who have some sympathy for the common laboring people of this country and who will give us money enough to do business with. With money the people can live under most any kind of tariff.

To the People of Rensselaer and Vicinity.

GREETING.

The election is now as the World's Fair numbered with things that are past. But say? What of the long weary evenings which are approaching as fast as the car of time can carry them. The question of most importance that comes up in connection with this thought is, "What shall I do that I may gain the most benefit; and have them pass the least burdensome?" The desecration of past ages, is that reading, or the exercise of our musical talents are the most beneficial because by so doing we gain the golden fruit of intelligence which only the superhuman power can deprive us of.

We are prepared to furnish you with any books, magazines or newspapers published in this and foreign countries, in any language, at prices that will entirely please you.

We also make some very special offers on tea and coffee. Ours is also the exalted privilege of supplying the public with W. W. Thomas' pure oil complexion soap.

And unto those who are weary and would rest, we have that which will give you rest unto the uttermost, in the form of Laudemans Bros. new adjustable bed springs, for which we are the sole agents for this country.

Stepping over as it were the 10,000 grand bargains we are enabled to make you; we will close for this time, close with making an earnest appeal unto the kings and queens of the farm, entreating with them to get our prices on poultry, eggs and butter before contracting elsewhere.

We extend a most sincere and hearty invitation to the public to investigate our lines and modes of business. Trusting that we may in the future sail happily together in the grand old ship of friendship, upon the deep waters of the sea of business, we would subscribe as yours most truly.

Office first door south of school house.

We take great pleasure in announcing the appearance of the Lester Comedy Co., at Opera House, commencing Monday, Nov. 19th. This is one of the strongest repertoire companies on the road and judging from the excellent reports from the press in the various cities they have played we can safely vouch for their ability as clever artists and ladies and gentlemen of more than usual merit. All should turn out and give them a grand house on Monday night. Ladies will be admitted free Monday to convince the patrons of their merit.

A Strange Case.

The case of George W. Dixon, a farmer residing near Woodsville, Ky., is puzzling his friends and scientific circles. In 1863 he was stricken in the harvest field and taken home to die. He could talk and was conscious, but his body from his neck was rigid and appeared to be freezing with cold. His mother, for lack of better medicine, gave him a bottle of camphor. His body soon recovered its natural conditions, but his head seemed burning with fever. Under a physician's care he recovered with one singular exception. Ever since, if he exposes himself to sunshine, whether or not it is hot, his body becomes rigid. It is equally bad for him to be in bright moonlight. For many years he has slept all day and done his work at night, plowing and sowing. On very bright nights he either remained indoors or carried a shade. In all other respects Mr. Dixon is like his fellows.

The Retired Burglar.

"Once, in a country town," said the retired burglar, "I broke into a small but very comfortable appearing house that I didn't expect very rich returns from, but which I thought would pay for the labor. I skirmished around a little in the cellar, finding the usual assortment of jams and preserves and things, and on the parlor floor I found about the ordinary run of knick-knacks. The things in general were of rather less value than I had expected to find them, and there was not much of anything worth taking. So I went on upstairs and into the front chamber.

"I'd scarcely begun on the bureau, and hadn't got the top drawer open, when I heard from the bed a sound very much like a laugh. I thought I might be mistaken, for I really didn't see anything to laugh at, and I should have thought that if there'd been anybody awake in the bed they'd have been more likely to be alarmed than to think it was funny to see me there. But the next minute I did hear a noise from the bed; no laughing now, just a man's voice, deep and solid, and no quavering, saying:

"Well?"

"It was a good, big voice, but there wasn't any shootin' in it, not just yet, anyway, and I turned my light on him. He was sitting up in bed, a pretty good-sized, square-shouldered sort of a man, and the minute I saw him I knew that I had heard somebody trying to keep from laughing and that this was the man.

"Wait a minute," he said, and there was something in his way of saying it that made me feel that it was all right to wait. He got out of bed and walked over to the bureau where I was and took a match out of an iron match box that was nailed against the window frame near by and lighted a lamp that stood on the bureau. Then he went across the room to a closet near the door I had come in by, which I suppose I would have looked into myself in the course of time if I hadn't been disturbed. He opened the closet door and reached in and brought out a jimmy, which he stood up against the wall. I wanted to stop him right there, but didn't exactly like to interrupt, and he reached in again, and this time he brought out a dark lantern. He stood that by the jimmy and was reaching in again when I stopped him.

"Don't," I said, and he respected my feelings and stopped and looked at me. I guess we both smiled a little bit then and then I just went away."—New York Sun.

We have seen a number of watch chains ornamented with a pretty charm in the shape of a watch case opener, which obviates the use of a knife or fingernail to open the watch. They are sent free on request by the Keystone Watch Case Company, of Philadelphia, Pa. Your jeweler here may have one for you; if not, send to Philadelphia.

The Keystone Watch Case Company is the largest concern of its kind in the world. Its capacity is 2500 watch cases per day. It manufactures every description of case, but its great specialty is that most popular of all watch cases, the Jas. Boss gold filled. These are equal in beauty and wear to solid gold—while they cost only about one-half as much. Boss and other Keystone cases are the only cases that have the famous non-pull-out bow or ring, which saves the watch from theft and accident. The Keystone Company does not retail, but our local jewelers handle the cases and swear by the thief-proof qualities of the ring.
