"Old Bill" Barnum and Man Friday from the '49 Camp were here last Saturday on their way to Atlanta, Ga., where they will work in the mining camp at the Cotton States exposition. They will walk the entire distance, "working their way," as it were. Man Friday has with him an old-fashioned wheelbarrow, which he claims to have trundled across the plains forty-five years ago. The vehicle is nearly eight feet long and is equipped with a full camping outfit. It has a history. Away back in 1850 Friday contracted the gold fever. He joined a party of prospectors near Council Bluffs, but just before reaching that city the leader absconded with the outfit, leaving Friday to continue the 2,000 mile journey through a wilderness. At the expiration of 125 days he reached Hangtown with one ounce of bacon, four ounces of clothing, and 1,000 pounds of energy.
