Israel's Most Sacred Day.

In the Jewish calendar Monday was Yom Kippur, or the day of atonement, one of the greatest holidays of the Jewish church. It began at sunset Sunday and ended at sunset Monday. The stores kept by Hebrews were closed in this city, as is the case with them every year. For more than thirty centuries this feast, prescribed by the Mosaic law, has been rigidly observed by Jews wherever they may be dispersed. Even the most liberal Israelite complies in some measure with the law of Moses prescribing the annual day of atonement.

MEMORIAL SERVICE

Observance in Plymouth of the Day of Mourning and Prayer—Solemnities a the Meeting in the School Auditorium.

Long before the hour fixed for the memorial service at the Washington school Thursday the citizens of Plymouth and vicinity were finding seats in the large auditorium and when the bell ceased its mournful tolling at 2 o'clock the room was well filled and many were seated on the stage. It was a quiet and sober assemblage and the audience sat silent and attentive as though in the presence of the dead. It was a part of the greatest funeral in the world's history, participated in by eighty million mourners. Wherever the American flag floated that day there was McKinley's funeral and all thoughts were centered at the graveside in Canton.

A selected choir of thirty voices under the direction of K. F. Brooke opened the service with the hymn, "Jesus, Lover of my Soul," and Rev. W. W. Raymond pronounced an appropriate invocation, beginning with the Lord's Prayer, in which the standing audience joined. The President's proclamation appointing the day as one of mourning and prayer, read by Jacob Martin, was followed by the resolutions prepared by the committee and presented by its chairman, Judge Hess. The preamble, reciting the personal and official virtues of McKinley, is too long to be printed; the formal resolution is as follows:

"Therefore, Be It Resolved, That in the death of William McKinley the nation has lost a soldier and patriot, a lover of mankind, an exemplary christian, an eminent statesman and a great and beloved chief magistrate, whose administration will ever stand out as one of the most eventful and illustrious in American history. And with our countrymen we unite in profound sorrow for the untimely death of President McKinley, as well as in admiration of his spotless character as a man and his great public services, which have brought so much honor, power and greatness to our great republic. And to the widowed wife to whom the President gave a life-long devotion as pure as it was beautiful we offer our deepest heart-felt sympathy."

When the choir had rendered Cardinal Newman's beautiful hymn, "Lead, Kindly Light," Mayor Jones, the chairman of the meeting, introduced Rev. O.S. Thornberry, of the Presbyterian church, the first speaker of the day. Rev. Thornberry painted a dignified but terrible picture of the great crime, comparing the good man who was stricken down with the cowardly brute who did the deed, and then proceeded to a consideration of the remedy for anarchy. Mere punishment he rejected because of its inadequacy except in the way of necessary regulation. Right, eternal truth, intelligently understood and universally disseminated, must be the starting point for any remedy.

"Freedom of speech is a blessing to any people," continued the speaker; "but when freedom of speech is taken to mean the right to distort and abuse, to execrate and lampoon, to hold up to contempt and ridicule, then it is that the divine idea has been misconceived and prostituted to an unholy and illegitimate use. And it will certainly bear fruit after its kind." Mr. Thornberry deprecated the powerful tendency to denounce principles and question motives where honest disagreements arise and said: "Hence I hold it to be safe teaching that no one has morally the right either from the stump, or the platform, or the pulpit, or through the press, or anywhere, to pour contempt and ridicule upon the well-meant ideas and achievements of his fellow. It will be a sad day for the cause of right and truth and sacred honor—but a most glorious day indeed for anarchy and its kindred doctrines— if the time should ever come when we shall regard other men as being as great humbugs as we feel ourselves to be, and their motives and endeavors as insincere and unpraiseworthy as our own."

The speaker suggested that if men will control their hysterical tendency to berate and belittle, to rant and fume, law-breakers and assassins would be less incited to commit their dastardly crimes.

Ex-Senator Drummond was next introduced and spoke eloquently as follows:

"We meet today with bowed heads and aching hearts in the presence of mighty Death. We come not as partisans, for in death all men are brothers; we come as American citizens whose servant has been murdered at his post of duty. He stood ripe in worldly honors, strong in health and intellect, heroic in his devotion to a frail and faithful wife, with the warm hand of fellowship outstretched to take and to hold the hand that murdered him.

"Oh God! it is a fearful thing
To see the human soul take wing
In any shape, in any mood."

"And yet more fearful and still more horrible it is to see one who has come from the great body of the common people step by step to the highest place given by men, torn from the bosom of her who first loved him as an unknown soldier boy, by the wretched hand of one who hates all government.

"Grave questions are repeating themselves in our sad and searching hearts. Sober men and women may well ask the spirit of Abraham Lincoln, of James A. Garfield—of William McKinley, Is this God's mysterious way? And, if it is His way, what does it all mean?

"In a country where Liberty lays her love and blessed mercy at the door of all alike; where a flag christened in the life blood of stout hearts is the emblem of all that is good in government; where the harvest song and the sweet melody of industry melt in harmony above and about the heads of freemen—presidents are murdered! And who shall stay the hand of the assassin? Shall we hedge our presidents about, with the glitter and gleam of armed men? Alexander, Czar and Autocrat of all the Russias, did so—and died in the arms of his guards, by the hands of assassins. Marat tried that and died at his bath, at the hand of Charlotte Corday. Kingly accoutrements will not save. Brute force has ever met brute force and ever will. The cunning of the assassin will strike through the cordon of armed men.

"Until Liberty bell sent out its blessed message of hope to an eager world, as far back as the knowledge of man runneth, government had been in a greater or a less degree an oppression. Men had governed men by force and fear. Some victor on the field of valor was taken up and crowned as king. Sometimes he lived until he was slain by his successor; sometimes he was vouchsafed to die a natural death. The record of kingships is one bloody train throughout profane and sacred history. Men had tried the vain pomp and glory of a government by brute force and had failed.

"In 1776, we declared upon a government new to the world. It was founded upon the cardinal principles of the teachings of Jesus Christ—faith, hope and love. Kings in scorn, smiled at our experiment. We opened our doors to the king-ridden hosts of Europe. They came, they are coming still. They brought with them their language, their customs, their traditions, their enlightenment, their science, their ignorance, their depravity, and I regret to say that some of them brought their hate for all government, for to them in their native land government was an oppression and a curse. Some of them, thank God, would give, as thousands of them have given, their lives to keep the stars forever in our flag's field of blue. Others, with hearts and souls saddened, depraved and darkened by centuries of oppression, easily enflamed by murderous teachings, would kill any man who seemed to be the government. Coming from a land where to dream evil of the king was at one time treason, they become drunk with license and call it liberty! Emma Goldman—the Modern Medusa—trails her snaky locks and sows her seed of fire and death throughout our land. John Most—the infamous and the awful—is heralded and heroized; and William McKinley, beloved of men, is murdered as a sacrifice to the monster of the red hand and the red flag. And so long as men and women are given the license to stand in the name of liberty, with the red torch in one hand and the red flag in the other, teaching the ignorant, the weak and the depraved that all governments are a curse and all men in high places should be slain to the end that anarchy, red-handed and reeking, may prevail, so long shall we meet together as we do today about the biers of our murdered presidents, in sorrow, humiliation and shame.

My friends and neighbors, I deem it an exceptional privilege to stand, as it were, in the presence of this illustrious dead, and to renew my devotion to my country, by placing a flower on his tomb. He was my president. He stood as and for my beloved country. His assassin struck not at him; his deadly bullet was directed against the cherished institutions of our native land.

"Breathe there a man with soul so dead,
Who never to himself has said,
This is my own, my native land?"

After the audience, standing, had joined in singing "Nearer, My God, to Thee," George H. Thayer, jr., was introduced and delivered a beautiful panegyric upon the character and life of McKinley, whom he pronounced our best beloved President." The simplicity of the martyr's character, his devotion to duty, his adherence to truth, his affection for his fellow men and theirs for him, all were eloquently portrayed by the gifted orator.

Mr. Thayer was followed by ex-Senator Parker, who spoke earnestly and convincingly of the necessity for obedience to law and respect for established institutions. Lynching is anarchy and too much freedom of tongue and pen has an anarchistic trend, the orator maintained. "Let there be a thorough understanding among us that obedience to the law is the thing." Senator Parker spoke with deep feeling of the universal sorrow for the nation's loss and expressed his faith and hope that Roosevelt is a patriot as was his predecessor and that the strong young nation of the west will live and flourish.

The chairman called upon Senator Parks, Judge Capron and H. G. Thayer for brief talks and each of them responded appropriately. Senator Parks deplored the spread of anarchy but thanked God that the government still lives and will live, and he spoke earnestly for higher christian effort in political as well as private affairs. Judge Capron suggested that the law-makers in this twentieth century have before them the problem of restraining rather than punishing crime, of apprehending criminals before the commission of criminal acts, and declared that science must point out the method. Mr. Thayer eulogized the character of McKinley and pleaded for a general recognition of the supremacy of law. Other hymns were sung and the solemn service was closed by Rev. J. E. Hartman, who pronounced the benediction.

From one o'clock until five all business of a public and private character was suspended and the city was hushed and solemn. From sea to sea and from the great lakes to the gulf the funeral hour was observed. Railways, streetcar lines, steamships, factories, all united with merchants and professional men in the universal tribute of respect. The day will ever be remembered for the profound and widespread mourning of a great and busy people.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requiring constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrah Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surface of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

GUMPTION.

"ONE does not have gumption till one has been properly cheated." Persons of gumption are using Ivory Soap, women who have trusted themselves too near the precipice of false economy and who can now appreciate the true economy in a soap made of pure vegetable oils and other high-class ingredients, but made in such quantity as to bring the price within the reach of the very poorest family. Indeed it is the very poor who most need it, for they can least afford the extravagance of common soap.

To Clean Carpet on the Floor.

An excellent method of cleaning a carpet upon the floor is to use a bran swab, which is made by tying a generous handful of wheat bran or sawdust loosely in the middle of a double square of cheesecloth. The swab is dipped in clear ammonia water and rubbed hard over the surface of the carpet. When the swab becomes dirty, it is washed in plain water and the cleansing process is renewed.
