CORRESPONDENCE.

For the Democrat.

The most careless observers of passing events cannot help noticing of late the peculiar stir and activity prevailing among a class of men which is known to include the leaders and ruling spirits of that dark lantern organization known as the Union League. Especially since it is authoritatively known that the legal Governors of the Northern States will not issue any call for enlisting of troops to fill the quotas under the late demand by the President for 500,000 more men, and that the draft will be used to fill the quotas. Have these men been busy at some kind of secret work that seems to promise good and great results to the order, whatever may be the result to the people or the country? Men are riding hither and thither, on the cars, on horseback through the dust, during night as well as the day. Little knots of abolitionists, generally with a government assessor, collector, deputy provost or a pair of shoulder-straps, are often seen congregated on the street corners, conversing in whispers, wearing earnest faces, and always silent when a democrat or a stranger passes by. Crowds of men are silently collected in town halls, in lowly farm houses, and in the open groves. No notices of the meeting are posted up, but at certain times, always after dark, the crowd gathers, and then the exercises begin. At such times, the words of command and the even tramp of men in drill can easily be heard. After the business of the meeting is over, the crowd silently melts into the darkness; there is no noise, no murmur, but all is quiet systematic work. In every town, village or city, the
