

GAYER BOOTS.

A little glove sits up our heart,
As tides stir up the ocean,
And snow white muslin, when it fits,
Wakes many a curious notion:
All sorts of ladies' fashions thrill
Man's feelings, as they'd order,
But little female gayer boots
Are death, and nothing shorter.

—New Albany Ledger.

But then suppose the gayer boot,
That causes this emotion,
Was on a "cuddled" lady's foot,
Would it not change your notion?
—Salem Advocate.

Of course it would, for unlike you,
We're not a "cuddled" lady's foot;
We get the "emotion" from the shoe:
You get it from the "lady's" color.
—Ledger.

Raising Calves.

Suppose the calf takes one half the milk of a good cow for ninety days, what will he cost at that age, with butter at 50 cents a pound? Only the moderate little sum of about $22.50. Rather a costly calf, Mr. Shattuck of Norwich, N. Y., thinks; and lest farmers be deterred from raising calves altogether, he gives the following process, in the Country Gentleman, as one by which they may be raised much cheaper:

In the first place let the calf remain with the cow for two or three days; then put him away by himself. The calf is usually tied with a rope, or put in stanchions, at feeding time, and in learning it to drink by putting the hand on the nose and pressing the fore finger on the end near his mouth, he will reach out his tongue, get a taste of the milk, and learn very readily to drink from the pail. I sometimes feed new milk for a day or two, then let the milk stand twelve hours, take off the cream, warm the milk, and feed to the calf for a week or say then let it stand twenty-four hours, being careful not to feed too much so as to loosen the bowels; and after the calf gets to be four to six weeks old, it will eat almost any thing you give him.

I prefer to keep them up in the stable or small yard, until they are two or three months old, and give them what they will eat, as this treatment keeps the bowels more regular than to let them run to grass. I find a small quantity of oil cake meal a very good addition, for a month or two at first. A little dry clay, I think, very good for them to lap occasionally where they are kept confined.

I have seen many calves raised in this way, and have raised a great many good ones myself.

I do not pretend that a calf raised on skimmed milk will look as fine as those raised on new milk, but I claim that you can raise very good ones, and far more economically, and especially in the dairy districts where we have a large quantity of milk to feed.

One very essential point, in raising calves in this way, is to feed each calf by itself. I have always noticed where a lot of calves were fed together in a long trough, there would be some very poor ones, and that is owing to some drinking faster than others.

The Dutchman and the Reb.

The day that Wade Hampton charged Kilpatrick's camp, I was at Gen. Carlin's headquarters, when a rebel soldier carrying a carbine, and a Tenthent member of the 9th Michigan cavalry, came up. On reaching the camp the Dutchman saluted and said:

"Captains, dere ish you prisoner?"

"Where did you get him?" inquired the Adjutant General.

"Vell, yer see, I was in der beginning of der fight, and got cut off; and mitout der gun or horse, hid in der swamp.—Pinchy, I sees some shabby coming up, so I hust shumped behind der tree to grab him. Der 'turn fool didn't comes close to nuff, and I shotes out mit 'surrender.' I shook hands mit him, and we made one compact to strike for ter camp; and, if it so be we make Rebel lines, I was to be his prisoner, and if der were ter Union lines, he is to be mine prisoner."

Working and Thinking.

It is no less a fatal error to despise labor when regulated by intellect, than to value it for its own sake. We are always in these days trying to separate the two; we want one man to be always thinking, and another to be always working; and we call one a gentleman and the other an operative; whereas the workman ought often to be thinking, and the thinker often to be working; on both should be gentlemen in the best sense. As it is, we make both ungentle, the one envying, the other despising his brother; and the mass of society is made up of morbid thinkers and miserable workers. Now it is only by labor that thought can be made healthy, and only by thought that labor can be happy; and the professions should be liberal, and there should be less pride felt in peculiarity of employment, and more in excellence of achievement.—Ruskin.

Trifles.

Nothing is a trifle which is displeasing to our friend. If everybody thought so, and acted upon the thought, there would not so often arise that dull, bad weather, those cloudy feelings, those little bitter disagreeables, by which married people, brothers and sisters, parents and children, by degrees, embitter one another's lives, and which create altogether that gray, heavy, oppressive cloud, discomfort. By the side of the above motto, we should insert on the tablet of home: Nothing is insignificant which gives pleasure to our friend. Because from this arises that bright, summer mild atmosphere in the house which is called comfort.

MUSICAL.—Prof. J. P. Webster, the popular western composer, is now engaged upon a new piece of music in commemoration of the death of President Lincoln.—He intends that it shall be the great effort of his life. The words are by S. Fillmore Bennett.

The wheat crop in this section still continues to promise an abundant yield, and unless something yet befalls it, our farmers say they will harvest an unusually large crop.—Corydon Democrat.
