

What Eyes are Made For.
One would almost think that eyes were an arrangement to prevent people from seeing. The same thought passed in the mind of the prophet thousands of years ago; "Eyes have they, but they see not." It is astonishing to observe both what people do see and what they do not. One pair of eyes, for instance, will return from a crowded church, and will have seen (by an almost supernatural faculty, as it seems to us) every bonnet, every ribbon, every dress, every significant look, every posture of action of a thousand people. Our own eyes, looking upon the same scene, would have seen not one of all those things.

One pair of eyes will go through the length of Broadway, and see only those who seem to look upon the owner of said eyes. Another pair will not have seen one person in that long walk, nor have missed one horse that walked, trotted, cantered, or steadily pulled.

One man will see all the children—the sweet, rosy-faced, clean ones gladly; the ragged and keen-faced ones sadly. One man will see all the art can exhibit, and another nothing at all. One man sees machines and all mechanical contrivances; another sees all dresses and shows things.

Now and then there is a rare head, whose eyes seem to take in everything, from a mouse that sends into a hole up through all varieties of still and active life to the very top. And some there be who seem to see nothing for all the effect produced upon them. Broadway is as empty as a street in Tadmor. Their eyes seem to have been made up with unprepared nerve, so that, like a daguerrean plate without chemical coating, nothing acts upon it and no picture is burnt in it.

It is a great pity that we are not taught in our early days how to see. It is more important than reading and writing, than arithmetic or geography. In a world of boundless treasures, beneath, on every side, we walk as if there were but few things worth seeing. And even these, when we have looked upon them once or twice, we exhaust and suppose that we have really seen them!

A man may pass and repass a burdock near the path which he treads, going and returning from his work daily. He would laugh if he were told that he did not know that familiar plant. And yet, in making it, God put upon it and within it a hundred things which are worth observation, but which this man never sees nor suspects. The least things that come from God's hands are so full of qualities that they will bear close scrutiny and long study. And we think that the chief advantage to be derived from teaching children to draw is not to be found in the pictures made, but in the eyesight gained. This, however, implies that they are taught to draw directly from nature, and not from copybooks. Let a child study a plant in order to draw it, and he will find out more about it in one day than otherwise he would in a lifetime. We only glance at things.

JONES' Corner.

Jones has been among the spiritualists; he joined a circle the other night and had manifestations. The medium was a tall, thin, angular, cadaverous individual, who looked as if, after getting up the frame, nature had been seized with a fit of economy, and neglected to put in the underpinning and plastering. The circle was mixed, being made up of elderly females, thin men, with a few pretty girls. Jones seated himself between two of the last, and all clasped hands around the table. Jones says it was delightful. He squeezed the little hands, and when an unusually loud knock started the circle the little hands squeezed Jones. Sniffins, who is so skeptical that his father dont believe him, was there to ask questions.

"Where was I born?" asked Sniff.

"In the poor-house," Sniff's turn-up nose waxed red.

"Correct," said Jones.

"How many children have we in the family?"

"Nine."

Here a dispute arose as to whether the spirit rapped eight or nine. So Sniff asked again.

"How many children have I?"

"One," was the reply.

"Probably correct again," remarked Jones.

Here Mr. Sniffins arose in a wrath, slapped his beaver on with a bang and retorted.

"The circle is not harmonious," said the medium, in a deep, sepulchral voice. Jones thought it was as he pressed the little hands.

"Let me ask a question," said a vinigry old lady.

"Is the spirit of my husband present?"

"He is."

"Are you happy, John, without me?"

"Very happy."

"Where are you?"

"In h—l."

John's relief looked at the medium. The medium smiled. He looked as if he had the tooth ache. The circle laughed, whereupon John's relief seized the lamp and hurled it at the medium. It broke over his devoted head, and left the circle in darkness. Jones says a spirit kissed him. He tried to seize the spirit, and caught one of the pretty girls about the waist, whereupon there were screams. In the meantime Jones was aware of a furious engagement on his left. A fight was produced, when it was found that John's relief had seized venerable Cob, mistaking him for the medium. They were separated, when the "meum," with the coal oil dripping over his woe-begone countenance, said "the circle must be brok up," it was not harmonious.

To PRESERVE A BOUQUET.—A florist of many years experience sends the following receipt to preserve bouquets to the American Artisan:

When you receive a bouquet, sprinkle it lightly with cold water; then put it in a vessel containing soapsuds which nourish the roots and keep the flowers as good as new. Take the bouquet out of the suds every morning and lay it sideways in fresh water, the stock entering first into the water; keep it there a minute or two, then take it out and sprinkle the flowers lightly by the hand with pure water. Replace the flowers in the soapsuds and they will bloom up as fresh as when gathered.

HELMBOLDT'S

Genuine Preparations

His Solid and Fluid Extracts embody the full strength of the ingredients of which they are made. They are left to the inspection of all. A ready and conclusive test of their properties will be a comparison of those set forth in the United States Dispensatory. These remedies are prepared by H. T. Helmbold, a druggist of sixteen years' experience in this city, and we believe them to be reliable, in fact we have never known an article lacking merit to meet with a permanent success, and Mr. Helmbold's success is certainly prima facie evidence, His Drug and Chemical Warehouse, in the City of New York, is not excelled, if equalled, by any in the country, and we would advise our readers, when visiting that city, to give him a call, and judge for themselves.
