GRANT VS. STANTON.

The New York Times, in bestowing upon General Grant some excellent counsel as to the composition of his cabinet, suggests that ex-Secretary Stanton be made secretary of the treasury, and is of the opinion that the recent disclosure that Stanton twice ordered General Banks to relieve Grant from command during the siege of Vicksburg, ought not to prevent the president elect from availing himself of Stanton's brains.

It is not probable that General Grant shares this charitable and patriotic view. He does not want a man in his cabinet who has tried to stab him in the back, and has fawned on him when looking in his face.

What has become of the orders issued to Banks to relieve Grant? They were on file in the war department. They are missing. Who was chiefly interested in their disappearance? Who was most likely to have stolen them? It has frequently been charged that Stanton would not hesitate to steal or destroy evidence in the war department which criminated him. Now comes the proof of the truth of the charge. Banks' pockets were safer places of deposit than the solid stone walls in which Stanton reigned.—Chicago Times.

ALABAMA CLAIMS.

The state department has received the official treaty for the settlement of the Alabama claims. It has been correctly reported. Washington dispatches of yesterday said that the committee on foreign relations has not considered it, and will not report on it until the new administration shall come in. Mr. Sumner, chairman of the committee, is opposed to the ratification, and there is a rumor that General Grant has expressed himself strongly against it. The latter is improbable. It is not a matter on which he would be likely to take ground at this time, and it is well known that he has a great admiration for Mr. Seward as a diplomatist.

Inasmuch as our national debt binds us in the sum of $92,000,000 "good and lawful money of the United States," to keep the peace, there is but just one point to consider about the treaty which Reverdy Johnson has negotiated. Has he got the best terms we can get without going to war? Let the opponents of the treaty say exactly what they would have. Let them say, if Great Britain will not yield what they demand, what they propose to do about it. Is the treaty to be damned because Reverdy Johnson shook hands with Laird?

REPUTATION.

Those who wish to see how many and eminent examples may be cited in favor of reputation of national debts, and how ingenious and plausible an argument can be made in support of such a policy, ought to read the pamphlet of Mr. Butts, late of the Rochester (N. Y.) Union. He says: "No large national debt has ever been paid, or discharged, except by repudiation."

The debt then, of the United States, if it please God, and the bondholders will behave themselves as men possessed of bowels, shall form an honorable exception to this rule. The tax-payers will pay the debt once, provided an attempt be not made to make them pay it twice. They will pay it once, if they be not so few in number, and so poor, by reason of the exemption of the rich from taxation, that the burden prove not greater than they can bear. Considering that the government is daily guilty of repudiation in the payment of pensions to soldiers' widows and orphans, and of bounties to soldiers themselves, the bondholders should have a wholesome fear of public indignation aroused by schemes for wholesale swindling. Will the take "justice and fair bond?"—Chicago Times.

THE BOOK BUSINESS.—But few persons have any proper comprehension of how vast is the book business in this country. Take one item, for instance, as illustrative: Matthew Hale Smith's "Sunshine and Shadow in New York," which is the exciting work of the day, has already reached the enormous sale of 25,000 copies within thirty days. The publishers, J. B. Burr & Co., of Hartford, Conn., use two tons of paper a day, and run six large rollers constantly to supply the current demand. This is doing a wholesale business with one book alone. This is a large work, between seven and eight hundred pages royal octavo. Surely ours is a reading country.

Respectfully inscribed to Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Thayer, on the death of their only daughter.
How can we say to thee "be calm"? For every wound there is a balm: For like thee own, our hearts have bled, And we "would not be comforted."
Like thee own soul, torn and bleeding, We did not let the wound bleed; Which told of duties all neglected—Of Heaven's sympathy rejected, But nursed our grief till it became A garment wrapped around our home.
Yet, all we can, we offer thee, Of comfort, hope and sympathy; Hush all thy longings, thy despair, Be but of earth, and angels we'll The blossoms of thy earthly care.

CORRESPONDENCE.

INDIANAPOLIS, Feb. 2, 1869.

Ed. Democrat:
The general assembly has passed but few bills so far, and but little has been done in which the people generally are to be benefited. About 270 bills have been introduced for the consideration of the concentrated wisdom of the law makers, and before the session closes we may expect some warm discussions. The temperance question, the railroads, the gravel roads, the negro school bill, are subjects on which the orators are expected to spread themselves. On the subject of temperance several bills have been presented for the consideration of the committee, but as yet, no report has been agreed upon. The first, and I believe the only petition, on this subject, was presented to-day, by Capt. Johnson, from citizens of Marshall county, principally of Bourbon township. Three or four hundred petitions on the subject of railroad extensions, &c., have been presented. If the people knew how little attention is paid to these petitions of every kind, they would not go to the trouble of procuring names and sending them in. Gentlemen who believe that something must be done to remedy the evils complained of, find it very difficult to point out the exact plan by which the desired result can be brought about. Something must be done, and the railroad interests may not be surprised to learn one of these days that their "consolidations" have been knocked into a "cocked hat."

The speaker of the house, Hon. A. P. Stanton, is a young man congenial in his nature, and so far has given satisfaction to the members generally. He is a little absent-minded, and occasionally makes some laughable mistakes. In putting a question the other day, he said: "As many as are in favor of the bill will say I as your nose is called!" Of course the house came down. Again: "As many as are in favor of laying the motion on the floor will say I."

The oldest member in the house is Mr. Carnahan. Mr. Williams, of Knox county, resembles Abraham Lincoln, and is the tallest man in the house. Mr. Teltus is the smallest. Mr. Buskirk is the widest, and the republican leader. Coffroth, of Huntington, is the acknowledged democratic leader.

The members from Marshall are watching the interests of their constituents, and have not missed a vote so far. Mr. Johnson is a member of the committee on swamp lands, and on the organization of courts. Mr. McDonald is on the committee on trust funds, and on statistics and emigration, and on a special committee on the establishment of a state printing office.

McDonald has introduced a bill for raising salaries of jurors to $2 per day and 6 cts. mileage; witnesses to $1.50 a day and 6 cts. mileage; witnesses before justices of peace, 75 cents per day. Will probably be adopted.

GEN. GRANT.

It is asserted in Washington, that Grant is preparing his resignation as general, and that he will hand it to the president as soon as the electoral votes are counted. This step on the part of General Grant is one that has been urged upon him so persistently that he probably feels himself called upon to take it in response to public opinion whatever may be his own private predilections with reference to the matter.

The next question occurs as to his successor. That this will be General Sherman, there is little room to doubt. The speech made by that gentleman, at the military re-union in this city, was a direct bid for the position. The price which he offered is one which is eminently acceptable to the radical senate; and hence he will be adjudged the prize. Those who may be disposed to find fault with Sherman for the unusual concession on his part, to flatter radical sentiment, should remember that he was bidding for the grade of general, that which, in the estimate of a military man, there is nothing more desirable in the gift of the republic. More or less charity should accompany in view of an offensive act; and this charity should be proportionate to the strength of the temptation.—Chicago Times.

CRIME.

BALTIMORE, Md., Jan. 28.—Four colored men and a white man, charged with the crime of stealing the body of a Col. Williams from a tomb, about seven miles from Kingston, N. C., were taken from the jail in that place, where they were held, a few days ago, and murdered by a band of 30 or 40 citizens of the place. No arrests have as yet been made.

NEW YORK, Jan. 29.—Several burglaries and attempted burglaries continue to occur daily, and the police have begun to arrest parties under suspicious circumstances. So much excitement was created by this process, in Maiden Lane, this morning, as to cause an alarm of fire.

NEW YORK, Jan. 29.—A curious disturbance occurred, this forenoon, at the corner of Canton street and Park avenue, Brooklyn, between white and colored persons, resulting eventually in the mortal wounding of John Hopkins, a white man, by Samuel Halsey, colored. The apparent origin was the unprovoked knocking down of a colored man. A large number of people became involved, and the riot was, with difficulty, stopped by the police.

A daring attempt at burglary was made last night, at No. 44 Maiden lane, but only $50 were secured, and two of the burglars were subsequently captured.

Walden alias Butts, the author of the recent heavy bank robbery in Brooklyn, was arrested to-day.

LOUISVILLE, Jan. 29.—Near Owensboro, Kentucky, some days ago, a negro man seized a white lady and instantly outraged her person. The negro was afterward captured and committed to prison; but, on Wednesday night, a mob broke the jail, took the prisoner out, and hung him.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 29.—The suicidal mania is in full force again here. At 8 o'clock this evening, in Newport, opposite Cincinnati, A. H. Chapman, a man of family, shot himself in the head with a pistol, and died immediately. Mental aberration, the result of financial losses, was the cause.

An unknown man, a German, supposed to be from Marietta, O., committed suicide at the Clifton house this morning.

John Norson, residing near London, O., committed suicide this afternoon, by hanging. No cause is known. PITTSBURGH, Pa., Feb. 1.—An old man named David Melville, sexton of the Presbyterian church at Sewickley, committed suicide this morning, by hanging, in a barn adjoining his residence. Excessive love for drink caused the rash act.

FORT WARNE, Ind., Feb. 1.—An Irishman from Michigan, attempted suicide at the National hotel, this morning, by cutting his throat with a razor. He had $200 on his person. He is still living. His name is unknown.

QUINCY, Ill., Feb. 1.—About half-past 5 o'clock this afternoon, as the ferry-boat Rosa Taylor was making her last trip, and when about the centre of the river, an elderly gentleman, probably sixty years old, jumped overboard, and was drowned. He had been about the levee all the afternoon, making special inquiry as to what time the ferry-boat would make its last trip; but no one suspected his purpose. No one knew him, or where he came from.

GRANT AND BANKS.

Gen. Banks' Own Version of the Vicksburg Imbroglio—What One of Stanton's Clerks Says.

A dispatch to the New York papers, dated Boston, Tuesday, Jan. 26, says: "The following editorial appeared in the Evening Traveller to-day, which is understood to be written, or, at any rate authorized, by Gen. Banks himself, who arrived in this city from New York last evening:"

THE EDITORIAL.

The recent revelation that an order was issued from the war department, to Gen. Banks, just before the fall of Vicksburg, directing him to repair to that point and supersede Gen. Grant, has been made a topic for comment in newspapers, in all parts of the country. It has been denied by Secretary Stanton, and the truth of the statement has been called in question by Mr. Dana, who was assistant secretary of war at the time; but, notwithstanding this, we have the assurance that the statement is true.

The reader may ask, if this is so, how has the fact leaked out now, and why was it withheld from the public so long. In answer to this it may be said that the enemies of Gen. Grant have reported something to this effect before, the matter having been brought to the knowledge of a few army officers at the time. This has been denied at the war department, and there are no papers on file there to confirm the truth of the report. Gen. Grant never heard of the story until about four weeks ago, when one of his friends called his attention to it. Gen. Badeau, of his staff, and a congressional friend called on Gen. Banks, and not only learned that the story was true, but obtained from him all the correspondence between himself and the war department on the subject he having retained his orders, and guarded them with the mere care when he learned that Secretary Stanton had disposed of the duplicates. The contents of these documents were discussed at Gen. Grant's headquarters, and a member of the staff communicated the matter to the correspondent of the New York Times, who first made it public.

It may be asked how Secretary Stanton can deny these facts, but these who know him best find little difficulty in answering. Perhaps the fact that they are in the handwriting of Gen. Halleck, and signed by him, will be urged as an excuse for his denial; but their contents, when published, and we presume Gen. Grant will publish them some time, will show that both Secretary Stanton and President Lincoln knew what was written, and that all was written under their direction.

Officers of the Nineteenth army corps know of this correspondence at the time, and Gen. Banks was urged to obey the order, but he ventured to disregard it, and the fall of Vicksburg, a few days later, vindicated Gen. Grant, and the department saw fit to call Gen. Banks to account for his disobedience. He kept his own counsel, knowing that the publication of the correspondence, or the fact of its existence prior to the recent election, would injure the republican party, and it is only made public now by the friends of Gen. Grant.

Some weeks since, while Secretary Stanton was talking of for a position in Grant's cabinet, our Washington correspondent expressed the opinion that he would not be invited to such a position, and a few days later—about the time Grant obtained this correspondence—his friends announced that he proposed to remain in private life. If it should turn out that he took advantage of his position as secretary of war to destroy important public documents, and especially those which might prevent his own political preferment, it will be a cause for regret to the country that this determination was not reached some years ago.

To the Western Associated Press.
NEW YORK, Jan. 29.—The Herald has the following important communication, signed "W":
"NEW YORK CITY, Jan. 28, 1869.—Seeing the contradictory statements published in the papers regarding the facts, or otherwise, of an order having been issued from the war department to Gen. Banks, shortly before the fall of Vicksburg, directing him to relieve Gen. Grant, I beg to state the exact facts of the case, and thus settle this much controverted matter. While Gen. Grant was operating in front of Vicksburg, I was employed as clerk in Secretary Stanton's office at the war department at Washington. Secretary Stanton wrote two orders, directing me to make two copies of them,—one for telegraphing, and one for filing. The first of these orders was addressed to Gen. Banks, directing him to proceed at once to Vicksburg and relieve Gen.

Grant. The second order was addressed to Gen. Grant, directing him to turn over his command to Gen. Banks on the arrival of the latter, who had been ordered to relieve him. I do not pretend to give the wording of those orders. I have given, however, their exact substance, and they should be on file now in the war department, unless they have been removed. I will state further that the copies of these orders, which were to be transmitted by telegraph, I sent by a messenger to the war department telegraph office, by order of Secretary Stanton. These copies should also be on file in the latter office.

It is to be hoped that enough of the foregoing is true to insure the country against being again disgraced and cursed with Stanton's services in the forthcoming cabinet.

A REMARKABLE CASE.

A Young Wisconsin Girl in a Trance for Four Weeks.

A Milwaukee paper says: A number of our city physicians went out to Burlington yesterday to investigate the case of a child which, for twenty days has been in a trance. The case is pronounced one of the most remarkable that ever came under the notice of the medical faculty, and there is little wonder that it creates a sensation. In the report of the affair published yesterday, we had not sufficient details to explain the case thoroughly, but are enabled to do so to-day from the lips of persons who have seen the child.

A little daughter, 12 years of age, named Mina, of Christina Rausch, a German farmer, living about one and a half miles from Burlington, Racine county, in this state, had a severe attack of measles and diphtheria. She had nearly recovered from these on the 8th day of January, when she called her father to her bedside and told him that she was going to sleep, and that she would sleep for a long, long time. She said she should look as though she was dead, but she should not be dead, and she made the father promise that he would not bury her, which promise it may be readily supposed he has been faithfully kept. Soon after making the request, the child to all appearances sank quietly and peacefully into her last sleep. By all it was supposed that Mina was dead, and the body was enshrouded and placed in a coffin. After the sleep the body showed no signs of death, although the pulse and heart ceased to perform their functions, and no device could show that the respiratory organs were in use. The eyes closed.

In this state Mina has lain now for 20 days, without a sign of death, other than a sinking of the cheeks and eyes, which would be natural with one who had fasted for so long a period.

Three days ago a vein was tapped, and blood flowed as naturally as it would in a living person. A blister raised on the flesh precisely as it would on that of one alive. A neighbor of Mr. Rausch told our reporter that he pressed a finger on the hand of the girl. Her flesh was solid, and upon taking away the finger, the spot was white. In a few seconds the color came again, precisely as it would if the flesh of a living person were pressed in the same manner.

Under these circumstances it is reasonable for parents and friends to believe that the child lies in a trance, and there is little wonder that the case is attracting so much attention among the medical faculty. It will be watched carefully to the end, and with interest. A large number of persons have visited the house of Mr. Rausch, and all express themselves as lost in wonder and amazement at this strikingly strange affair.

LATER.

Mina Rausch, the little girl at Burlington, Racine county, who was mentioned in a previous dispatch as presenting a remarkable case of suspended animation, has been found to be dead. It is supposed that she lay in a trance at least two days previous to her death.

REVENUE FRAUDS.

Over Half a Million Dollars in "Drawbacks" Obtained by the Connivance of New York Custom-House Officials.

Wm. J. Korn, L. N. Laidlaw, and a clerk in the export bureau of the New York custom house have been arrested by Deputy U. S. Marshal Nodine, of the Eastern district, Brooklyn, at the instance of Dist. Atty. Tracy, under warrant issued by Judge Benedict. The charge is that of defrauding the government by procuring large sums of money upon fraudulent claims for "drawbacks," presented and passed at the office of the Fifth auditor in the treasury department at Washington. The frauds with which the accused are charged extended through a period of seven months, from January to July, 1867. The amount realized was nearly $500,000.

The plan of these frauds was about as follows: Under a law which prevailed from 1862 until February, 1868, there was a tax of 5 per cent, imposed upon all domestic manufactures; but when the articles were exported, the amount levied in taxes was refunded.

In order to secure the return of the money, an exporter had to obtain from the internal revenue collector of the district in which the goods were manufactured, a receipt showing that the tax had been paid. Then he must obtain a certificate from a custom house officer that the goods described in the collector's receipts had been exported. The exporter, upon exporting the goods, was required to give a bond that the goods should not be re-landed within the United States. With the certificate of the superintendent of exports showing that a bond had been given, the claim was presented to the treasury department and the amount paid in tax refunded. The allegations in this case are that the defendant, Korn, with others whose names have not yet appeared, succeeded in obtaining the above stated amount upon bogus exports, and that Laidlaw and the custom-house clerk also acted in promoting the fraud.

Korn is held to bail in the sum of $30,000, and the others in lesser amounts. Dist. Atty. Tracy has been at Washington during the last two weeks, and upon examination of the records of the fifth auditor's office, found that fraud of this character had been perpetrated during the past two years to an extent which is perfectly alarming, the amount being estimated at not less than $500,000. Warrants have been issued for the arrest of other parties alleged to have concerned in the fraudulent transactions, and they will undoubtedly soon be executed. When the case comes before the court, further developments may be expected—such as will open the eyes of the country to a new system of fraud, gigantic in its proportions.

HIDEOUS TRAGEDY.

Deliberate Murder of a Young Girl by her Lover.

Scene, Belmont county Ohio. On the afternoon of the 21st inst., the body of a young girl was found lying in the run by the roadside. Her head was nearly severed from her body, and several small wounds were upon her hands and breast.

The name of the murdered girl is Louise Fox, and the perpetrator of the crime is Thomas Carr, who had been for some time residing in her family. It appears that Carr desired to marry Miss Fox, but had been refused by her parents, on account of her extreme youth. The girl's brother, nine years old, was with her when they met Carr in the lane, who walked a few yards with her. He then pushed her down, and commenced to feel in her pocket for his weapon. The little boy ran to his father's house, about 400 yards distant, and gave the alarm. The father at once hurried to the place, and found his dead daughter as above described.

Carr fled in the direction of Sewellsville. Returning by another road, he stopped at a house and borrowed a gun, saying he wanted to shoot a rabbit. On Friday morning he was discovered behind Fox's spring-house, sitting on the ground. On going to him, it was found that he had cut his throat with a shoe-knife. The windpipe had been severed, and was protruding from his neck, and he could breathe only through the wound. He had also shot himself in the left breast, above the heart, and the ball appeared to have lodged in the shoulder. By pressing his neck together he managed to talk with difficulty. He confessed the murder. He was taken to the house of Daniel Mamma, where he still lies in a critical condition.

On the day the crime was committed, Carr visited the girl at Alexander Hunter's and conversed with her for nearly half an hour. On this occasion she mentioned to him the hopelessness of his suit, at which he appeared greatly distressed, avowing his intention to commit suicide. He asserts that up to this time he had no intention of taking her life, and did not come to that conclusion until about three hours before the deed was committed.

About 1 o'clock Carr started from Sewellsville, his intention being, he says, to visit Fox's, and see if there was not yet a chance of procuring their consent to his marriage with Louise. While on his way there he saw the object of his insane passion coming down the road, accompanied by her little brother. When she came up he joined her. By this time his dreadful purpose had become firmly fixed in his mind. During the short walk the girl told him that her grandmother, whose house she had just left, had told her that her parents had declared that she should never keep his company again. The reply of Carr was that "he guessed both of them had a short time to live," adding the query, Louise, are you prepared?" to which she responded, "I am," and immediately after he pushed her down and drew out the razor, which he had hitherto kept concealed in his pocket, and proceeded to cut her throat.

The desperado passed the night in concealment and next morning was found as described above. He will hardly live.
