A Washington telegram says: "Representative Townsend says he expects an extra session of Congress to be called in October. He does not think there is any need for Congress to meet before then, but there are many reasons why it should meet at that time. The Commissioner of the General Land Office has rejected the application of the heirs of John E. Boulogny for the issue of prize land scrip to the extent of 70,000 acres. This claim dates from the year 1717, and is based upon an alleged grant by the Government of France covering a portion of the then French colony of Louisiana. The Land Office decided against the claim in 1838, but in 1868 the heirs succeeded in securing the passage of an act by Congress affirming their title, which was suspended by Congress within thirty days, it having been learned that the Supreme Court had decided against the claimants, and that under the law governing grants only 2,500 acres could be granted. The matter was then again brought before the Land Office, the claimants alleging that the act was in the nature of a contract, which could not be annulled by Congress. The question will probably be taken to the Supreme Court.

THE HADDOCK MURDER.

Opening of a Celebrated Criminal Trial at Sioux City, Iowa.

The Council and the Jury—Betting Men Offering Odds on a Disagreement.

[SIOUX CITY CORRESPONDENCE.]

On a dark and rainy night, in the month of August, 1886, Rev. George C. Haddock, a minister of the Methodist Church and a stalwart prohibitionist, was assassinated in one of Sioux City's public streets. The murder created a profound sensation in the community. There was universal condemnation of the deed, and an almost passionate demand that the perpetrators be hunted down. Meetings in scores of places in Iowa and other States were held. Religious, temperance and other organizations passed resolutions denouncing the crime, and expressing sympathy for the widow of the murdered man. Contributions came in from every direction and a handsome sum was thus provided for her, and smaller sums were sent to aid in closing the saloons and discovering the murderers. The day of the murder Gov. Larrabee offered a reward of $500, the limit allowed by law, for the apprehension of the guilty parties. The City Council also offered a reward. Later the Methodist ministers offered a reward of $1,000.

On the day following the murder the Coroner's inquest began taking evidence, and after two days the evidence showing the fact that valuable clues were likely to be developed, the investigation was made secret. The investigation covered a long period of time, there being extended adjournments. Circumstances were developed which fastened serious suspicion on one Harry L. Leavitt, who had kept a low variety show in Sioux City. Suspicion was also fastened upon several others with whom he was found to have been intimately associated. But the trouble was there was no satisfactory proof. Leavitt and other suspected parties testified before the Coroner's jury, and had stories to tell in which they denied knowledge or part in the crime.

But before the Coroner's jury adjourned, it was noticed that these parties, toward whom suspicion pointed, began to disappear from the city. Leavitt was among those who vanished. He was finally arrested in Chicago, and confessed all he knew in connection with the tragedy. He fixed upon John Arensdorf, a member of the Franz Brewing Company, as the man who fired the fatal shot, and declared that there were present at the murder Henry Peters, the brewery driver, standing at Arensdorf's elbow; Fred Munchath, Jr., Geo. Treiber, Paul Leader, Harry Sherman, Louis Plath and two other Germans. Arensdorf, Leader, Munchath and Sherman were instantly arrested, and warrants were sworn out for the others named who had disappeared. Albert Koschnitzki was arrested in California, and Sylvester Grande in Kansas City. After a long and patient investigation the grand jury returned two indictments against all the nine defendants above named, charging them jointly with murder and conspiracy. At the January term of court the attorneys for Arensdorf demanded that he should be first put on trial, and claimed to be ready for trial. The prosecution asserted its legal right to say which defendant should be first tried, and asked that a speedy date be assigned for trial. The court set the trial for the 21st of March. Some days prior to this date the defense insisted that the prosecution should elect which of the defendants should be first tried, and the prosecution replied by electing John Arensdorf, the principal defendant, and that he be tried on the charge of murder. Thereupon the court so ordered, and set the trial for the 23d of March.
