The SPORTING WORLD FOR THE HOUSEWIFE

Princeton's Football Captain.
Henry W. Pell, captain of the Princeton university football team, is one of the best known gridiron knights in the east. Pell is now in his senior year. He was re-elected to the captaincy last year after leading the orange and black kickers through a hotly fought but disastrous season.

Pell is a native of Brooklyn, being a graduate of the Polytechnic Institute of his home city. He showed considerable football talent while in the preparatory school and had but little difficulty in being appointed to play on the Princeton team.

Pell was criticized in some quarters for endeavoring to do too much of the coaching of last year's eleven. Claims were made that he left too little to the judgment of the professional coaches. Pell will follow out a different plan in developing the 1902 team and will depend almost entirely on coaches to round the men into form. He hopes to better last year's record by this means.

International Cricket.

If there is one thing which arouses interest in cricket in the outsider, it is an international match. In an international match his patriotism is aroused, and he roots for the home team against the foreigners. Local cricketers are therefore jubilant over the news that the dates for the match between the Associated Cricket Clubs of Philadelphia to the Metropolitan District Cricket league placed the latter organization in a position where it was necessary to decline being financially responsible for the game. The best the Philadelphiaans could do after taking all the choice days for themselves was to let New York have Sept. 25 and 26. The first of these days is the date set aside for the international athletic contests at Berkeley oval, and, of course, many spectators who would otherwise be at the cricket match will be at the athletic games. With everything pointing to a deficit being encountered and without sufficient funds in the treasury to provide for it, the league had no recourse but to decline the game. The Knickerbocker A. C., however, has now assumed the financial responsibility, and the match will be played on their ground at Bergen Point, N. J., on the days offered the league. The Englishmen have sailed from Southampton.

Max Wiley a "Pro."

Max Wiley, up to this year the champion amateur wrestler in more than one of the A. A. U. classes, is now an out and out professional and is meeting all comers at 140 pounds at a lake-side resort near Buffalo.

Wiley agrees to throw all comers in fifteen minutes or forfeit $50. He has had lots of opponents, but has yet to lose $50. Wiley has a match on with Johnny Hazlip of Buffalo. Wiley is to throw Hazlip twice in an hour. It was Hazlip that Wiley met when he first turned professional. He won the fall in one hour and ten minutes. When they met again in Buffalo, Wiley put Hazlip down twice, but Hazlip won one fall in forty-three minutes. It is evidence of Wiley's improvement that he will next essay to throw his old opponent twice in the hour.

Pyne's Golf Record.

Percy Pyne, the Princeton golfer, who was intercollegiate champion two years ago and who was among the competitors in the amateur tournament, made a new record for the Kebo Valley links at Bar Harbor before leaving for Atlantic City. He played the eighteen holes in seventy-seven strokes, his halves being thirty-five and forty-two. It will stand as the amateur record and is only one stroke behind the professional record of seventy-six strokes by Bernard Nicholls.

Players and Passes.

It is said that the trouble between the St. Louis players and Secretary Heilbroner had its origin in a rule passed by the club compelling players to pay for all passes that were issued by them to games played on the St. Louis grounds.

Brooklyn Players Loyal.

The Brooklyn players all deny the report that at least four of them have been signed by American league clubs for next season. They say they have not even been approached, to say nothing of signing.

Tricks of the Trade.

The young housekeeper, full of enthusiasm and inexperience, often stumbles upon little secrets and "tricks of the trade" that it is good for older heads to know, thereby proving the heads of the well worn adage that "experience is the mother of invention." When "we" went to housekeeping, after estimating with paper and pencil until we had our little capital most wisely invested and, as we thought, had everything provided for, I learned shortly, to my dismay, that my many years in an office had not fitted me to judge of the number and nature of the utensils required in a kitchen and that consequently many necessities were still lacking.

After setting my wits to work I learned of many little makeshifts that proved so satisfactory I still cling to them, although the necessity no longer exists. I found that a fruit jar or bottle does very nicely as a rolling pin when no other is obtainable.

That a bottle proves a very satisfactory potato masher.

That a baking powder can is just the right size for a biscuit cutter and convenient to handle.

That that same baking powder can makes an excellent chopping utensil for potatoes, bread, vegetables, etc.

I also learned that nothing would prevent my apple pies from running over in the oven except an inch wide strip of clean white cotton cloth, wet and drawn tightly around both edges and fastened with wet flour.

That a collar of stiff white paper pinned about a layer cake is the most effective means of keeping the filling inside until it "sets."—Maude E. Smith, Hyman in Housekeeper.

A Swinging Flower Stand.

Blooming plants in the window are beautiful to look at from the exterior, and yet when it is desired to adjust the shade, wash the glass or close the shutters they become a great nuisance. If the pots are placed on the usual shelves suspended on brackets across the window. Our picture shows a very handy arrangement, which leaves the window free at any time for cleaning and makes it possible to obtain access to either side of the plants without turning the pots.

AFFORDS ACCESS TO WINDOW.

ing the pots. The frame which supports the shelves is extremely light and can be removed bodily when the plants are taken out of doors in the spring. A small bracket is secured to the top of the window frame, and a second bracket rests on the floor, the vertical post of the frame swinging between the two. A bracing rod aids in the support of the pots, and it is an easy matter to swing the whole stand around against the wall of the room should it be desired to allow more light to enter or to display the plants in the room. The inventor of this handy arrangement is Fred L. Reach of Dalton, Mass.

The Latest in Lamps.

The new fall lamps are things of much artistic beauty. The shades far surpass in elegance anything heretofore produced. The tall, tapering Greek shape has this year largely taken the place of the once popular squat Egyptian. The shades show a strong tendency to spread tops, somewhat suggesting blossoming flowers. The flowers of the shades are soft and mellow. The general shape of the lamp is high and rather full bodied as against the slenderness seen in high lamps heretofore produced. Many new patterns in the Japanese bronze lamps are shown in the new samples. The deep brown hue and fantastic decorations of these goods make them particularly attractive. Most of the porcelain lamp vases are rather plain so far this year, the elaborate raised work being sacrificed for skillful and tasteful flat decorations. The art nouveau lamps show little change from those of last season.—Chicago Journal.

An Appetizing Salad.

A very appetizing salad is made of new cabbage and sweet green peppers. Take half a new cabbage, remove the outside leaves and cut out the heart; then with a very thin bladed, sharp knife shred the cabbage fine as chrysanthemum leaves and shake it up with the hands so it is light; then take about four long green peppers, remove the stems and seeds and shred them with the knife as fine as the cabbage. Lightly mix the peppers with the cabbage; put it in a large salad bowl, make a plain salad dressing and pour it over the whole and serve at once.

She Had.

"Bridget, I can't find that new rice boiler I bought the other day. You ought to have a place for everything." "I have, mum. That closet under the sink is where I keep everything, mum."—Chicago Tribune.

HE FEARED RIDICULE

During the Franco-Prussian war a young German officer named Fritz von Weber was in love with a girl named Zaire, an Alsatian, whose father was a general in the German army. The general refused his consent to the union. He and Fritz both went to the war. Zaire reached his quarters, he found a friend, one Dr. Max von Bulow, a great joker. Fritz told the doctor all about it.

"Fritz," said the doctor, "leave the matter to me. Tomorrow old Homburg takes his usual ride along the north road. He goes unattended. You must be in the little wood by the spring. He will be attacked by a number of our fellows disguised as the enemy. When he is attacked, you must rush forth and rescue him. In his gratitude Zaire shall be yours."

The morning came. Down the road on his old horse came the general. Suddenly from the wood rode a squad of the enemy—terrible fellows. The general saw them and turned to fly. The old horse was stubborn. He commenced to jump up and down, and the result was that the general was captured. The enemy put a rope about the general's neck. They were going to hang him. The general shed tears. "I am General von Homburg," he groaned.

The enemy grinned and threw one end of the rope over the branch of a tree.

"I am a father," sobbed the general. The enemy gave a strong pull on the rope.

"I—I am still in the prime of life! Don't hang me; please don't!" cried the general.

The rope tightened.

A shout was heard—ringing shots, fierce words, the tramping of hoofs. The enemy fled; the general was saved. His deliverer bowed before him.

It was Fritz. The general would have preferred hanging. The young man bowed low.

"Your pass!" thundered the general. "I—I have none," said Fritz.

"You heard the orders. Return to camp and report yourself under arrest," snorted the general.

That evening Fritz—poor Fritz—sat in his tent. A guard walked before the door. But all the army rang with the praises of the general, who had that day met a squad of the enemy and single handed had defeated them.

Dr. Max was furious. He imitated the general's horse. He jumped up and down and snorted.

"I'll fix him!" he cried. "I'll show him up!"

Then he took his pen and sat down and wrote the whole story out—the true story.

"Tomorrow," said Dr. Max, "I'll send this to my paper unless he compromises."

He stood before the general. "Ah," Dr. von Bulow, "I wish?"

"Can I see you alone, general?"

The general's aid retired.

"General, we have had enough."

"Enough what?"

"Enough humbug."

"How?"

"Those men were your own men. I have their account of the affair. It is not complimentary to you. It is very complimentary to Fritz. General Fritz must marry your daughter."

"Sir," thundered the general, "do you presume?"

"Oh, yes," smiled Dr. Max; "yes, I do presume. I own a newspaper, you know. The whole account must go forward. In three days the whole world will be in a broad grin over you and your horse unless—"

"Unless what?"

"Unless Fritz marries Zaire."

The general hesitated. He had been praised, honored—he dreaded ridicule.

"Come down!" cried Dr. Max. "It's no use holding out, general. Come down like a man!"

The general hesitated, turned, wriggled, fumed and offered money, but it was of no avail.

"Come down!" cried Dr. Max. "Come down! Shall Zaire marry Fritz?"

"Yes," growled the general.

"And you will introduce him as your son-in-law at once and release him from arrest?"

"No—that is, I mean yes."

"And you will give him an appointment—make him your secretary?"

"I won't."

"Ah!"

"Well, I will."

An Ancient Cavern.

Father Karner, who is assisted financially in his underground researches by the Austrian Imperial Academy of Science, reports that he has discovered in Esetre, in Hungary, an artificial cavern of large size, with rooms, passages and steps. From writings and cuttings on the walls it appears that in 1686 many Hungarian nobles took refuge here. A woman's name, with the date 1738, is also visible. On the ground in the lowest vault a prehistoric urn, with fragments of other ancient vessels, was found, showing that the cavern had been occupied in ancient times.

Not If It Were Lighted.

"This is our latest novelty," said the manufacturer proudly. Good, isn't it?" "Not bad," replied the visitor, "but you can't hold a candle to the goods we make."

"Oh, are you in the same business?"

"No; we make gunpowder."

English Fruit Culture.

Fruit culture is often conducted on a large scale in little England as well as in great America. A manufacturer of jam and jelly has a thousand acres at Histon, near Cambridge, employing at times 800 hands. The factory is in the center of the fruit farm.
