MARCUS ALONZO HANNA.

Before the dial had marked three score and ten years, Senator Hanna fell a victim to that dread disease, typhoid fever. Death has claimed another of the nation's greatest men. Although the end was not unexpected, it came as a shock to his friends throughout the whole country. Mr. Hanna was not a man who had been before the people many years, but he became famous in the short period of only eight years. Prior to 1896, he was but little known as a politician or statesman, but the very character of the man brought him into public notice. The cartoonists maligned him because they did not understand him. He was a great captain of industry and employed many men. His name was connected with trusts and strikes and other institutions, hostile to labor, when the real truth of the matter was, that labor and the laboring man never had a better friend than the noble soul that has gone to the great beyond. When the day comes to lay away his cold and silent form, the nation's jurist and statesmen will be there to mourn and pay their last tribute of respect, but his employees will be there, too, with bared heads and moistened cheeks to pay their tribute of love.

In politics, he was an uncompromising Republican, but in no narrow sense. He believed in that party and its traditions and worked ardently for its success. He had such energy and capacity and the genius for organization that he could do more than two men and more than a half dozen of some kind of men. As a campaign speaker he was fair and convincing, and could arouse as much enthusiasm as any man that ever spoke from the platform of a car.

He became conspicuous as the friend of William McKinley and to Mr. Hanna, McKinley owed his election more than to any other man. It was a friendship devoid of selfishness or personal ambition. People said that Mark Hanna would be the President, but he did not ask even small favors from Mr. McKinley when the latter became President. This is not customary with the ordinary politician. It is usual to have an understanding about the compensation for political service, but Mr. Hanna was too manly a man to even hint at such a thing as political recognition.

Aside from politics and aside from his relations to great corporations, he was large-hearted and open handed. He believed that charity was the greatest thing in the world. He believed, too, in that kind of charity that vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up. He was a rich man, but held his riches in trust, and it is only the present, when all eyes are turned to his life and character, that will reveal the generosity that characterized his life.

He was a public-spirited citizen and this public spirit manifested itself everywhere; in his own city, in his state and in the nation. Many times a public man will recommend civic improvement when such improvement will enhance the value of private property, but selfishness was never a factor when Senator Hanna recommended such improvements.

Senator Hanna was a manly man, a sincere friend, a safe counsellor, a wise statesman. His work is done, his name will live in history and endure in the hearts of a grateful people.

Some of the cartoonists of 1896 painted Hanna as the oppressor of the laboring man and the friend of trusts and monopolies. Those of them who are not devoid of conscience have lived to regret it. The oppressor of his fellow man and the friend of trusts could never say what Mark Hanna said: "I would rather be successful in my efforts to establish a just and lasting peace between capital and labor than to be president of the United States."

There are thousands and tens of thousands of American citizens who would like to have voted for Senator Hanna for president. This desire increased when they beheld his loyalty to President Roosevelt.

Mark Hanna came into the business and political worlds unannounced and never ceased to grow in favor with his associates. His life was a growth that won admiration on every hand.

Owing to the death of Senator Hanna, a meeting of the state Republican committee will not be held this week, as was the intention.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local application as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous services.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

PREMIUM LIST

Of The Wayne County Agricultural and Horticultural Society.

(By Walter S. Ratliff.)

For many years the annual dinner of the Wayne County Agricultural and Horticultural Society has been held in February, and on Saturday last, that for 1904 was held in the horticultural room in the court house.

The premium list, embracing all the good things for such a dinner, had been previously issued by a special committee and the lady members endeavored to prepare all culinary articles so as to secure awards.

In the vestibule at the court house, the roast turkeys and chickens, escalloped oysters, pies, cakes, breads, salads, etc., etc., were placed and passed on by the awarding committees. They were then removed to the dining room tables that were already filled with all the good things that one could ask.

There were 120 entries for premiums and the eighteen expert judges experienced some difficulty in deciding especially where several entries of articles possessing so much merit, were made for the same prize. At high noon, several hundred members, their friends and invited guests, partook of the repast that was equal to any yet given.

After the tables were cleared, the members assembled and the reports of the committees on awards were read. The programs for the year were distributed and several new names were added to the membership of the society including B. F. Wissler and wife, Clinton Shirley and wife, Edward McWhinney and wife, C. B. Jackson and wife, Elijah McMahan and wife and E. E. Commons and wife.

Capt. Caleb Jackson invited the society to hold its May meeting near his residence west of Centerville at Jackson Park, in place of the court house, which was accepted.
